TEAMWORK IS JAMAICA.....

TEAMWORK: Without it a team cannot function; with it, it can win every game, score every point. It is essential to the success and livelihood of all things and all beings . . . for the human body itself cannot function without the coordination and cooperation of every cell. And so Jamaica is like that team or that human body. It must have this essential element to survive and to succeed. Because of its importance, we the Seniors of 1963 devote our yearbook to it—to teamwork!

To the Graduates:

Every year the editors of FOLIO seek a theme which will unify the Yearbook of their class. For the year 1963 they have fittingly chosen the theme of "Teamwork" or "Cooperation." This is not merely because "teamwork" has become a popular slogan socially, politically, even educationally, but because they feel that this idea will give unity to the variegated experiences that best express your past three years at Jamaica.

While it is true that throughout history most of the creative work of the world has been the product of individual talent and thinking, cooperative effort and working together have taken on new significance in the twentieth century. In the first place, the world no longer consists of vast masses of illiterate, primitive people governed and driven by a small and privileged ruling class. Today our western civilization at least is one of free citizens with alternatives and choice, and thus it is important that people be won over to voluntary and cooperative effort towards goals that must be envisaged and must be attractive. Where individual scientists once worked with simple tools in small laboratories, much of the research of the present era, whether in the field of cancer, rocketry, nuclear energy, engineering or foreign policy, is being planned and executed by large teams of cooperating thinkers, each contributing his own specialty towards the grand design. Hence, it becomes ever more important for each individual to develop not only his own unique talent but also his ability to work as a cooperative member of a group.

While we at Jamaica do not underestimate the value of what can be learned from books and the laboratory, we hope that our students also learn much that is valuable for the future by participation in the extracurricular life of our school—our dozen teams, our four score clubs and service squads, our departmental publications, our orchestra, band and choruses, our dramatic productions, operettas and Sings, and our major publications like HILLTOPPER, SCRIBE and FOLIO.

When in future years your mood will prompt you to refer again to this Yearbook, I hope that you will, as you relive your youth, find gratifying evidence of the times that you worked together, played together, lived together.

To all of you we bid an affectionate farewell.

THE ACTIVITIES OF THE ENTIRE SCHOOL.

DR. HOWARD HURWITZ, Vice Principal, is in charge of all student personnel activities, including both the students' educational and vocational problems. He heads student programming and the guidance office. He was instrumental in writing the Jamaica High School Handbook and is former Social Studies teacher. He has held his present position for 7 years.

THE ADMINISTRATION

MR. JOSEPH LUNDARI, Administrative Assistant, is in charge of the organization and administration of the entire school. His duties include arranging the calendar school term and examinations, programming of the secretarial staff, taking care of extra-curricular activities and providing substitute teachers. Mr. Lundari was formerly the chairman of the program committee and a French teacher in the Language Department.

MR. GEORGE BARON

THE DEANS — Both offices, the Boys' Dean and the Girls' Dean, serve the same purpose for their respective groups. They handle all disciplinary problems that may arise among students during the school year in addition to trying to solve any personal problems the student may have by discussing it with the student and his parents. Each of the Deans and Ass't Deans is also a member of a department and teaches at least two classes a day.

The Guidance Staff, consisting of nine men and women, is concerned with the advising of all students in the planning of the subjects they wish to take through all their years of high school. Whenever necessary, the Guidance Counselor discusses academic problems with parents, and any student not doing well in a subject is referred to the guidance office where the reasons behind them are discussed. Aside from their jobs, as guidance counselors, these teachers are also members of various departments.

OUR NEW TOWER

These are two of the new music rooms in the recently renovated tower on our fourth floor.

After 6 years of planning and 7 months of construction, this year Jamaica High finally received its new music rooms.

The work was done mostly last term and at the beginning of this term. Music and band classes moved from their temporary abodes to the beautiful new rooms on the fourth floor, which include a renovated band room, a new music office and various classrooms.

Extra attractions which make things even more comfortable are brighter lighting, new flooring, and a brand new ventilating system.

Since New York City houses people from all over the world, it is important that we be able to speak at least one foreign language. To enable students to accomplish this, Jamaica High School has set up a language laboratory where students are able to hear the language they are studying spoken by natives. They also have the opportunity to practice speaking and to perfect their accents.

SOCIAL STUDIES DEPARTMENT

A knowledge of Social Studies constitutes one of the fundamental qualifications of an educated person this year the chairmanship of Jamaica's Social Studies Department resides with Mr. John Kunit.

The Social Studies curriculum is divided into four courses: World Geography, Modern History, American History and Economics. The first topic is a study of civics and the geographical factors that have affected mankind. The histories discuss the development of European and American nations. The chairman places special emphasis on the one-term course in Economics, given in the second half of the Junior Year.

Supplementing the required courses, the active Social Studies Department has started a Problems of Democracy Class.

This course covers one year's work in one term.

The courses offered by the Secretarial Studies Department include a four term Stenography and Typing course, which develops as stenography and transcription in the second year, a two term course in Secretarial Practice.

Mr. Bleckman and Mr. Isadore Dinkin

"Scribe" has long been the outlet for many of Jamaica's aspiring writers. The magazine has won Medalists awards twice, and its staff is always trying to top the previous rating. Its meetings are informal but informative as the students discuss their writing, ways to improve their stories and poems, plans for the upcoming magazine whose deadline date comes all too soon for the staff. The present Editors-in-Chief are Spencer Lambert, Bonnie Miller, and Joel Rosenthal. Mr. Isaac Bleckman serves as the faculty advisor for the literary material. The art work is produced by a staff under the supervision of Mr. Dinkin. This year's editors are Nicki Fox and Lawrence Frank.

THE HILLTOPPER

Mr. Charles Steingart, Advisor

Knowing that "news is as hard to hold as quicksilver, and that it fades more rapidly than any morning glory," the conscientious editorial staff of THE HILLTOPPER, our monthly student paper, has zealously and jealously guarded this publication's reputation as one of the "top school newspapers in the country." Under the superb guidance of their faculty advisor, Mr. Steingart of the English Department, nine editors have performed their herculean tasks this term: Editor-in-Chief, Diane Gersoni; Associate Editor, Joyce Purnick; Managing Editor, Adam Simms; News Editor, Mark Schneider; Feature Editor, Becky Kittell; Sports Editor, Peter Sills; Advertising

HILLTOPPER

Manager, Michael Chatoff; Photography Editor, David Steingart; and Assistant Editor, Lynn Tropper. This group directed the activities of the many reporters who complement the staff. All pertinent information about the school was carefully epitomized. The timeliness of the articles was evaluated. Each month, a girl and boy who had made outstanding contributions to Jamaica were selected for interviews. Profiles of faculty members were also included in each issue. Humor and feature items were always welcomed. The editorials discussed school affairs, significant world developments, or educational conditions which might affect the students.

RADIUS

Radius is Jamaica's mathematics magazine. Closely associated with the Mathematics Club, it is jointly sponsored by Mrs. Doris Faerber and Mrs. Lucy Brancato. Articles cover the entire range of mathematics, from new approaches to classroom subjects to fields never included in the curriculum. An annual feature is the individual research projects carried out by Jamaicans. Editor-in-Chief Richard Shaw is assisted by Co-editors Glenn Lambert and Jeffrey Brown and Business Editor Jesse Wal-dinger; the Inter-club Council representative is Steve Kreitzer and the secretary is Marshall Schwartz.

NUCLEUS

Nucleus, Jamaica's Biology magazine, is sponsored by Mrs. Miriam Smith. It features both original research reports by Jamaica's Westinghouse and Science Fair participants and articles on major current advances in Science. The staff is headed by Editor-in-Chief Ellen Doblin, Associate Editors Richard Shaw, Joseph Goodbread and Steve Paul and Art Editor Larry Ertel. THE JAMAICA ARTISANS

Mr. Paul Tanenbaum, Advisor

Sponsored by the Industrial Arts Department, the Jamaica High School Artisans have been providing service for virtually every department in the school. Five years ago, the idea of such an organization was conceived by Mr. Paul Tanenbaum when he became chairman of the department. From that time until now, the Artisans have been working diligently towards the beautification of Jamaica High School. They have been accomplishing this by painting offices, meeting rooms and locker facilities, doing all needed general repair work, erecting signs over the departmental offices and putting up bulletin boards in the halls. In addition, the Artisans have been providing teaching equipment, installing book cases, shelving and lighting facilities in the various offices. Aside from this, they have also been constructing suggestion boxes, letter boxes and filing equipment for such organizations as Girl's League, G. O., etc.

An Artisan is a skilled and expert craftsman. Not being content with his many duties, the Artisans have also done all of the scenery construction for the fall play and the spring show. They also painted some of the scenery, erected pulley systems for moving heavy backdrops and set up lighting systems.

This year the Boy Leader is David Shapiro; the Girl Leader is Linda Quan; Treasurer is Marc Gradstein; and Secretary is Alice Kossoff. Your service record at Jamaica, and your extra-curriculum activities are deciding factors as to whether or not you can apply for Senior Arista. Of course, in order to be accepted, excellent school grades are a necessity. During the honor society's weekly meetings, the students discuss the problems of the school they think they can solve. However, Senior Arista is not all diligent study and work, work, work! One of the outside activities includes parties among Senior Arista members.

GIRLS' LEAGUE

CHARLOTTE D. CHICKERING

Faculty Sponsor

The GIRLS' LEAGUE is- a SERVICE-HONOR organization and serves the school in many ways—USHERING, TEACHER SERVICE, SPECIAL FUNCTIONS. During their meetings they have lectures on the amenities, manners, manner, dress, grooming, and the importance of COMMUNITY SERVICE. The members of GIRLS' LEAGUE do many things for the community on their own time as well as through their organization's drives within the school—THANKSGIVING DRIVE for canned foods for underprivileged children, the CHRISTMAS DRIVE for new clothing and toys for specific youngsters (about 100 of them) at the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children (Queens), the PENNIES DRIVE for the orphans at the Ottilie Home, and the SPRING CAKE SALE, the proceeds of which are given to a charitable organization.

In order to become a member of GIRLS' LEAGUE, the candidate must first go through a training period in GLIT. To be eligible for GLIT, the girls must have had an average of 80% (with no failures) for each of two terms immediately preceding her application, and she must have no record in the Dean's office. During the term the GLIT girls meet once a week with their GIRLS' LEAGUE squad leaders and make items for sick children; they also do a similar project at home and they serve someone on the faculty for one period a day. Toward the close of the term, they are given character rating sheets to give to the teacher for whom they work and to two of their current subject teachers. These are returned to the faculty sponsor before the interviews are conducted by the Board of Governors. At the interviews the squad leaders also give their rating of the candidate. The entire plan is set up on a POINT SYSTEM.

Although the basic academic requirement is only 80%, a good number of the members of GIRLS' LEAGUE are members of Junior Arista and Senior Arista.

The motto of the organization is "SERVIAM"—"I shall serve."

VARSIITY

VARSIITY—MRS. KLEIN

GIRLS' VARSITY

Mrs. Genevieve Klein

The Girls Health Education Department at Jamaica High boasts a small elite group of girls known as Varsity. This organization is the highest girls athletic program of the school. All girls who are members of either Leaders or Swim Assistants, and who have earned three minor "Js" are eligible. The duties of Varsity are numerous and they are certainly the gym teachers' "Right Hand." Aside from teaching and demonstrating during the day, the girls spend several hours a week, after school, to help supervise the Athletic clubs. Varsity, along with Leaders, represents Jamaica at playdays at different high schools. Playday is getting together and playing games for enjoyment. At these playdays, the girls are able to demonstrate to others the high athletic standards that we at Jamaica are proud of. Sue Eiss heads the organization under the direction of Mrs. Genevieve Klein. Other officers are Vice-President—Donna Levine, Secretary—Angela Leva and Treasurer—Ann Shapiro.

LEADERS, OFFICERS AND GOVERNING BOARD

1. Renee Rein—Treasurer, Laura Bier—Vice-President, Alice Kossoff—Kossoff—President, Lynn Agoglia, Liz Atkins. 2. Rhoda Yaner, Barbara Hymowitz, Roberta Klein, Peri Salzberg, Linda Taft. 3. Sut Deutschman—Secretary, Joyce Biawitz, Student Council Rep., Marcia Skolnick, Gail Diem—Secretary to L.I.T.

Miss Ann Soernssen

Situated in one of the remote corners of our school is a small locker room. On one of the walls is a life size picture of a girl dribbling a ball. She represents Leaders, the girls' honor athletic organization. The members of Leaders can be identified by white gym suits with blue lettering. Daily, these girls engage in aiding the gym instructors in teaching and demonstrating various skills. However, the Leaders begin work early. They attend their own morning gym class where they conscientiously try to improve their ability. The organization is under the direction of Miss Soernssen, President Alice Kossoff, Vice President Laurel Bier, and a board of governors. A Leader must not only demonstrate ability in athletics but also show qualities of leadership. Together, Leaders have tried to demonstrate the fact that females are athletic, too, and that they can successfully lead and serve.

SWIM ASSISTANTS OFFICERS

SWIM ASSISTANTS

Mrs. Alice McVey

Practically every student who has ever attended Jamaica High School has, at one time or another ventured into the aquarium—better known as the swimming pool. During one of these excursions they might have seen some girls in red tank suits. These lasses in red are members of Swim Assistants. In order to become a Swim Assistant, one must, of course, be an excellent swimmer, but besides that, one must demonstrate extreme patience.

It is not easy to teach someone to swim or to teach a phase of swimming. This is what Assistants must do and each year hundreds of Jamaica girls benefit from their help. President Ronnie Gidseg and all the other girls boast one more quality which we must forego mentioning. Because water and an elegant coiffure just don't mix, they have forgotten their vanity so that the girls can learn how to swim.

DANCE CORPS

L. Fiengenbaum, H. Heyman, E. Ravitch, K. Gottleib, H. Stein, D. Swerdloff, N. Coplitz, D. Moore, M. Emmett, B. Eisen, P. Lapo, R. Aledort, J. Ashpitz, J. Rose, A. Lurie, E. Schnittke, R. Rozenfeld.

Many school productions, such as the G. O. shows, a Spring Arts Festival, or a musical, are given their final finesse through the medium of dance. Most of the spirited dancers belong to Dance Corps, an honor organization consisting of 20 members. Their activities are not confined to school grounds, for the group has participated at several dance symposiums and has performed at the Children's Shelter. Neither is their dancing confined to modern dance. Under the supervision of Miss Geller and Mrs. Dancis, the girls learn folk dancing, ballet, tap dancing, choreography and theory.

The requirements for Dance Corps include one term of modern dance and one or two terms of Dance Corps-in-Training. The girls are then auditioned individually and chosen on the basis of originality and talent. Each Wednesday, they go to a Dance Corps club and may be identified by their aqua and white uniforms.

Harriet Heyman, Vice-President of Dance Corps, felt that dance is an expression of oneself as well as a fine art, just as music or literature. Edith Ravitch, President, said "dance is a wonderful experience for the mind as well as the body."

DANCE CORPS

Miss Irene Geller

There is no doubt that the most spirited girls around Jamaica High School are the Cheerleaders. Headed by Captain Karen Gottlieb and Co-Captain Paula Blumenthal, these girls are present at all games and are instrumental in cheering our teams on to victory. An infinite supply of energy, hard work and outstanding coordination is necessary. But the main quality that one must have to be a Cheerleader is the ability to work together as a unit. A squad can only be successful when all the girls are putting their energy toward one goal. However, our cheerleaders not only try to install spirit during games, but also believe in conveying this spirit at all times. We at Jamaica certainly think that they are very successful.

Mrs. Lettie Roberts

The best of Jamaica's actors are gathered together in a group known as Drama Corps. Aside from being the backbone of the fall play, "The Skin of Our Teeth," Drama Corps is also occupied with presenting a program twice a year for the Children's Shelter and participating in a Shakespearean festival. An afternoon during the spring term is set aside for the Drama Corps Tournament. All students are invited to view this competition.

The officers of Drama Corps are:

YIDDISH CLUB

Mr. Irving Schiffman, Advisor

One of the most unusual clubs at Jamaica is the Yiddish Club. Sponsored by Mr. Irving Schiffman, this club introduces Yiddish to the interested Jamaica Beaver. Many students learn to understand the "foreign" language which their parents sometimes spoke when they wished to keep something from their son or daughter. Perhaps the above mentioned caused a student's interest in the Yiddish Club; but Mr. Schiffman has but one purpose for sponsoring the club: to acquaint students with the Yiddish language.

LANGUAGE CORPS

SPANISH CLUB

Mrs. Estelle Mayers, Advisor

The Spanish Club, under the guidance of Mrs. Estelle Mayers augments the Jamaica Beaver's knowledge of Spanish and Spanish culture. Either interest can be satisfied by the students who are members of this club. Members often discuss aspects of Spanish life and language, the customs of Mexico as well as Spain.

JAPANESE CLUB

Mr. Hilliard Gardiner

Under the able leadership of Mr. Gardiner, the Japanese Club has discussed and heard about Japanese culture and government. Speakers are invited who are expert in this area to develop an appreciation for Japan and its contributions to the world.

RUSSIAN CLUB—MR. JOSEPH BAICICH

The Russian Club is eagerly learning about Russia. They study its people, their language, customs, and education. The club consists of 60 members with R. Marynowcz—president, S. Sloan—Vice President, P. Markus—Secretary and S. Klees—Treasurer.

CHOIR

Mrs. Jean Gollobin, Advisor

For those students who show outstanding singing ability and are willing to contribute an unusual amount of time and energy, the choir has been created. They participate in all student assemblies and are the core of all musical productions at Jamaica. It is a select group that wears the traditional Red and Blue robes and sings the hymn after the opening Bible Reading. They maintain a very professional attitude towards their choral responsibilities and pride themselves on a long list of school and out-of-school concerts at which they have appeared.

MUSIC

OPERA WORKSHOP

Mr. Jean Gollobin

Have you ever tried to take an examination or listen to your subject teacher while in the background you would hear melodious sounds floating down from our newly decorated 4th floor tower? As it turns out, it is the members of the Opera Workshop, under the capable direction of Mrs. Jean Gollobin, rehearsing for their production of "Plain and Fancy," a musical for presentation in the Spring.

DEBATING SOCIETY

Mrs. Linda Rosenberg

The Debating Society is directed by Mrs. Rosenberg. Along with its president, Sam Shapiro, the Debating Team puts on numerous assembly programs, where (you guessed it!) they debate. Besides helping out in the auditorium, our Debating Team competes with neighboring schools. This Society is but one of the many organizations that have brought fame and honor to Jamaica High School.

ELECTRONICS CLUB

Mr. Irving Platnick, Advisor

Many of Jamaica's aspiring electronics engineers can be found absorbed in condensers, rectifiers and amplifiers during the Electronics Club meetings on Thursdays, in the Metal Shop. The Club's president, George Winston, and the other nine members are eager to learn all that Mr. Platnick, their advisor has to teach them. Want to learn how to test a television tube? Well, come to the Electronics Club and receive the assistance of the members.

SENIOR MATH TEAM

Mr. Isidore Newman, Advisor

The mathematical wizards of Jamaica make up this distinguished group which competes with teams from other New York City High Schools.

Meetings are held every day during the term, with five meetings scheduled against other schools.

SENIOR MATH TEAM

MATH CLUB—MRS. LUCY BRANCATO and MRS. DORIS FAERBER

You don't have to be a mathematics genius to be a member of the Math Club, but you do have to have a definite interest in Math. The members of the Math Club prepare lectures on topics such as Westinghouse projects. Aside from lecturing and doing tricky problems, they also must write at least one article for submission to "Radius."

SKI CLUB

SKI CLUB—MR. LEO GREENFEST

The Ski Club is one of the largest clubs in Jamaica consisting of about 150 members. Club members practice various exercises to build themselves up in preparation for skiing. They also see films and discuss their personal ski adventures. The best part of the club is the easy opportunity it gives its members to go skiing at the various ski centers. Isabelle Houlbreque, the president, is a skier with high skills. She leads the club to daring adventure down the slopes of Davos, Hunter, and Whiteface with a "Yip, Yip, Yo!"

SCHOOL MASCOT

"Hooray Jamaica!" Our school Mascot, the Beaver, alias a lanky hedhead, Alan Blumenfeld, has tried to raise the spirit of the team and lead enthusiastic students in various cheers throughout the school year.

BOOSTER SQUAD LEADER—Mrs. Hertz

The high-spirited girls who lead the Boosters in cheers are the Booster Squad Leaders. The club includes thirteen girls under their captain, Susan Borks, and Co-Captain, Alexia Broome. They meet every Friday the ninth and tenth periods under the sponsorship of Mrs. Hertz. Their main reason of concern is how to increase school spirit at games.

BOY, DOES IT FEEL GOOD TO SIT DOWN!

The TIRONIAN HONOR SOCIETY is the group made up of those students who have attained a mark of 90% or better in Stenography 2 or beyond, or in Secretarial Practice, have shown a sincere interest in the secretarial field, and have no record in the Dean's office. At their meetings the broader aspects of business are discussed and the importance of the proper business traits as well as personal qualities are carefully outlined. They also write articles on business and hope to incorporate them in THE TIRONIAN MAGAZINE in the spring of 1963. This is fine training for business. This group makes field trips to the Courthouse, IBM, Metropolitan Life Insurance Company and other business organizations. At their meetings the requirements for business excellence are discussed and from time to time they have a speaker. Civil Service positions and the training for them are also thoroughly presented. The TIRONIAN also serve the Department in many ways and the school as well through special secretarial services. They enjoy this not only per se but because it develops their confidence in doing "real jobs."

SURROUNDED! Although defenders seem to be closing in, Roman Czula's fast hand will pass the ball forward. Roman, who has played with several Jamaica teams, is regarded by many to be Jamaica's finest athlete.

OUT OF MY WAY. Beavers battle under the boards to get the rebound. Hoopsters continued fighting even when they were ahead by 25 points.

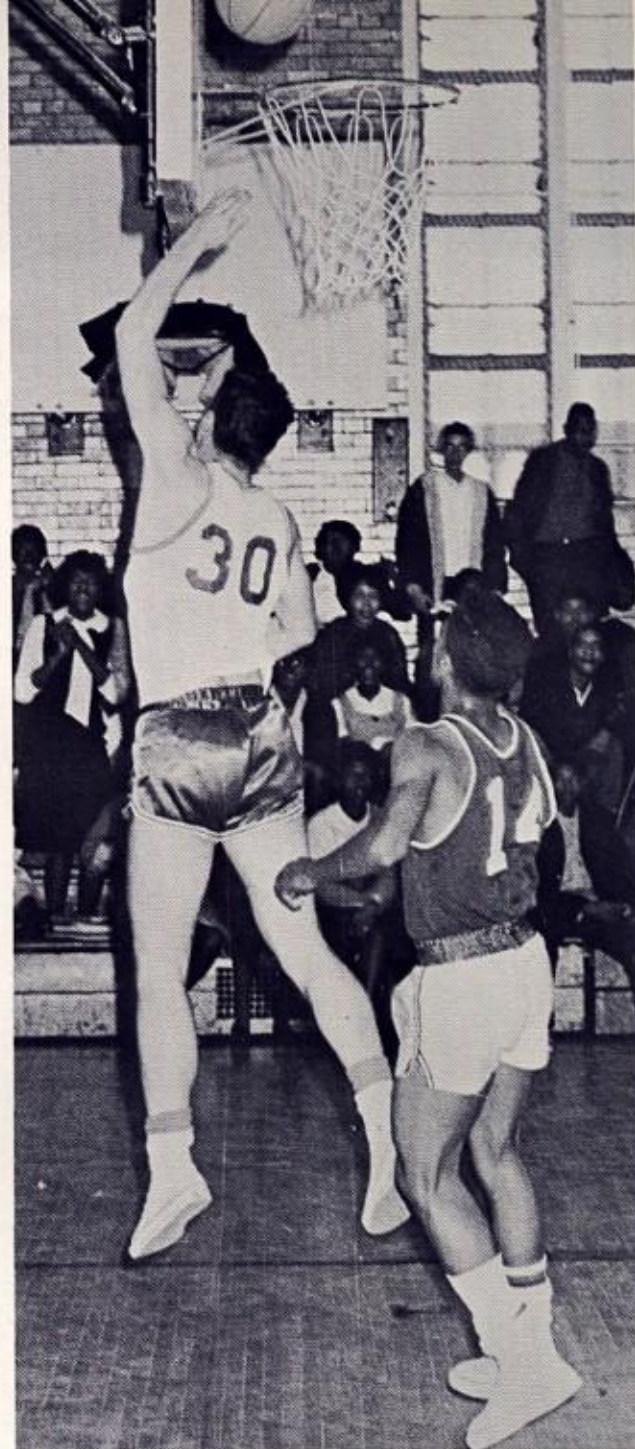

UP . . . AND IN. Center Bill Batchelor, after driving a few feet, scores with a jump shot.

The 1963 season saw a great team effort on the part of Hilton Shapiro's Basketball Team. The Varsity exhibiting that never-say-die spirit throughout the season, compiled 9-5 record and placed 3rd in their division. Although this was a slight step downward from our second place finish last year, our team gave us much to be proud of.

Center Bill Batchelor was the team's high scorer, boasting a 17.7 average. Bill holds a Jamaica two year record, having attained 501 points in his two years on the squad. Co-Capt. Dave McGriff was Jamaica's number one rebounder and second highest scorer. Calvin Shields, and Co-Captain Richie Singer proved to be most reliable forwards while the team counted on backcourt stars Peter Andrews, Marty Kusnetz, Roman Czula and Irving Bromberg to bring the ball upcourt and start our assault.

Due to changes in rules, Jamaica's third-place standing did not enable us to compete at Madison Square Garden for the City Championship. We were dangerous contenders for a playoff berth throughout the season until suffering a heartbreaking defeat at the hands of Richmond Hill High School. Next year's outlook is promising. Returning for another campaign will be newly elected Co-Capt. Bill Batchlor and Pete Andrews. They will be supported by juniors Doug Moore, Tom Watts, Peter Grim and several Junior Varsity hopefuls.

FENCING

Fencing, usually a non-spectator sport, drew much attention this year. Coach Gerald Perlin cultivated the school's taste for the sport by producing the necessary ingredients—a winning team. This was the most successful season in the history of the six-year-old team. In regular play the Jamaicans were 7-0. The swordsmen gained the Long Island and Queens titles.

The big prize, the City title, was next on the list. In a closely fought contest, we defeated the favorite, Brooklyn Tech, in the semi-finals. However, it was Stuyvesant who scored the real upset by beating Jamaica for the city title.

In the Individual Championship, Jamaica entered 4 of 32 spots. Captain Barry Schwartz finished in fourth place and became known as one of the toughest fencers in the city.

SOCCER

BOOTERS ATTAIN BEST RECORD IN TEAM'S HISTORY

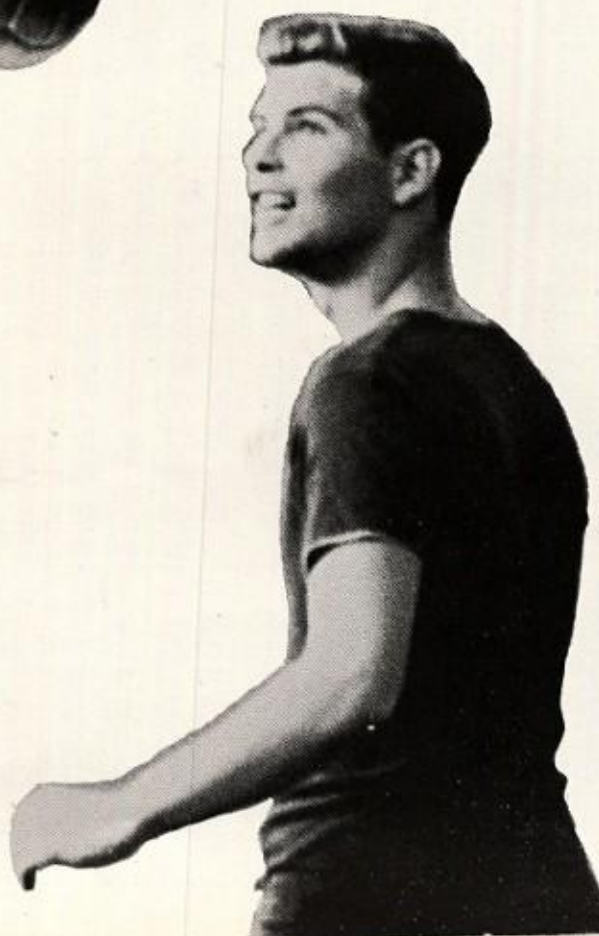

PRACTICE MAKES PERFECT. Here, a few spirited booters take preseason practice. This initiative paid off during the league competition.

SUMMIT MEETING. Coach Greenfest reviews the fine points of ball control with his top stars.

SOCCKER

Only a few years ago, a Jamaica soccer victory was a rare achievement. However, under the leadership of Mr. Leo Greenfest, our Soccer team has made rapid strides. Last year a new era in Jamaica soccer was opened as a 7-3 record was achieved. This enabled us to reach fourth place in the borough standings.

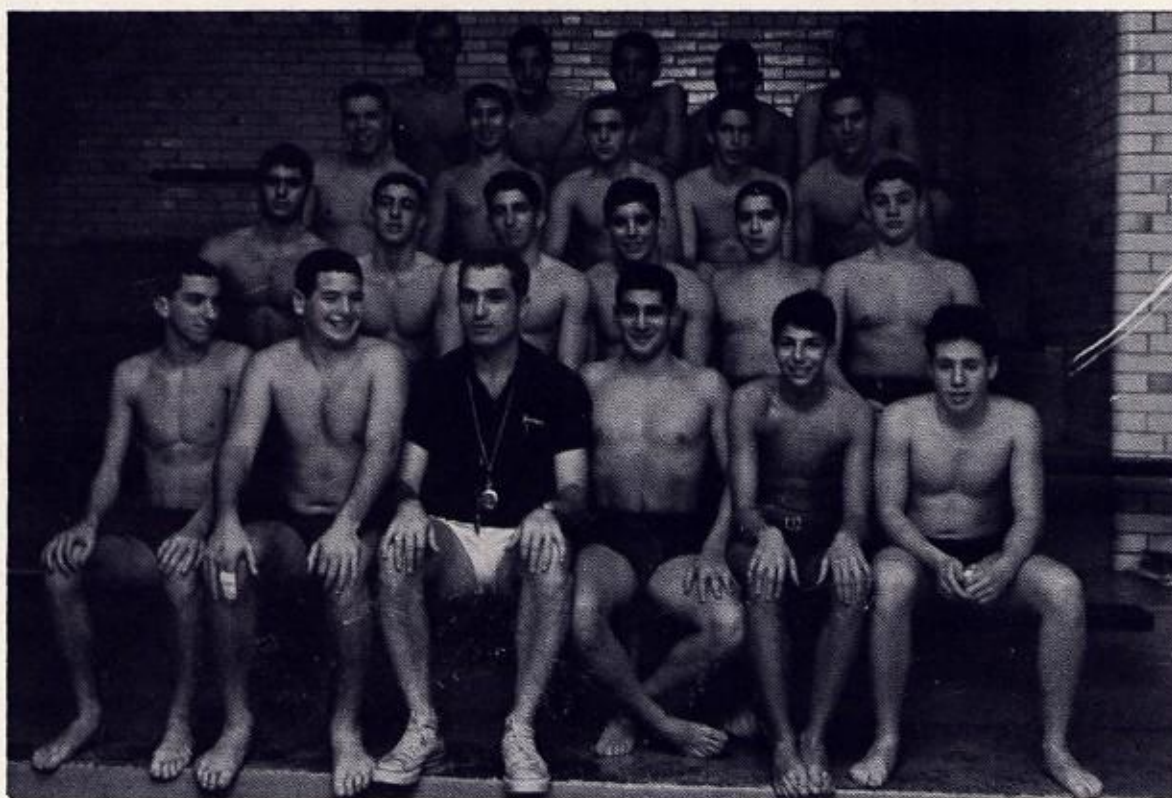

Hampered by rain, a hard schedule and the loss of our captain to injuries suffered in early game, the booters got off to a mediocre start. However, toward the end of the season the team suddenly caught fire and won five straight games. This inspired effort left Jamaica with a respectable 7-3-1 record, and fifth place in the borough.

Coach Greenfest looks forward to an equally fine season next year, due to our many fine juniors who played only minor roles in the '62 campaign.

SWIMMING

STRONG ALL-AROUND TEAM CAPTURES QUEENS TITLE.

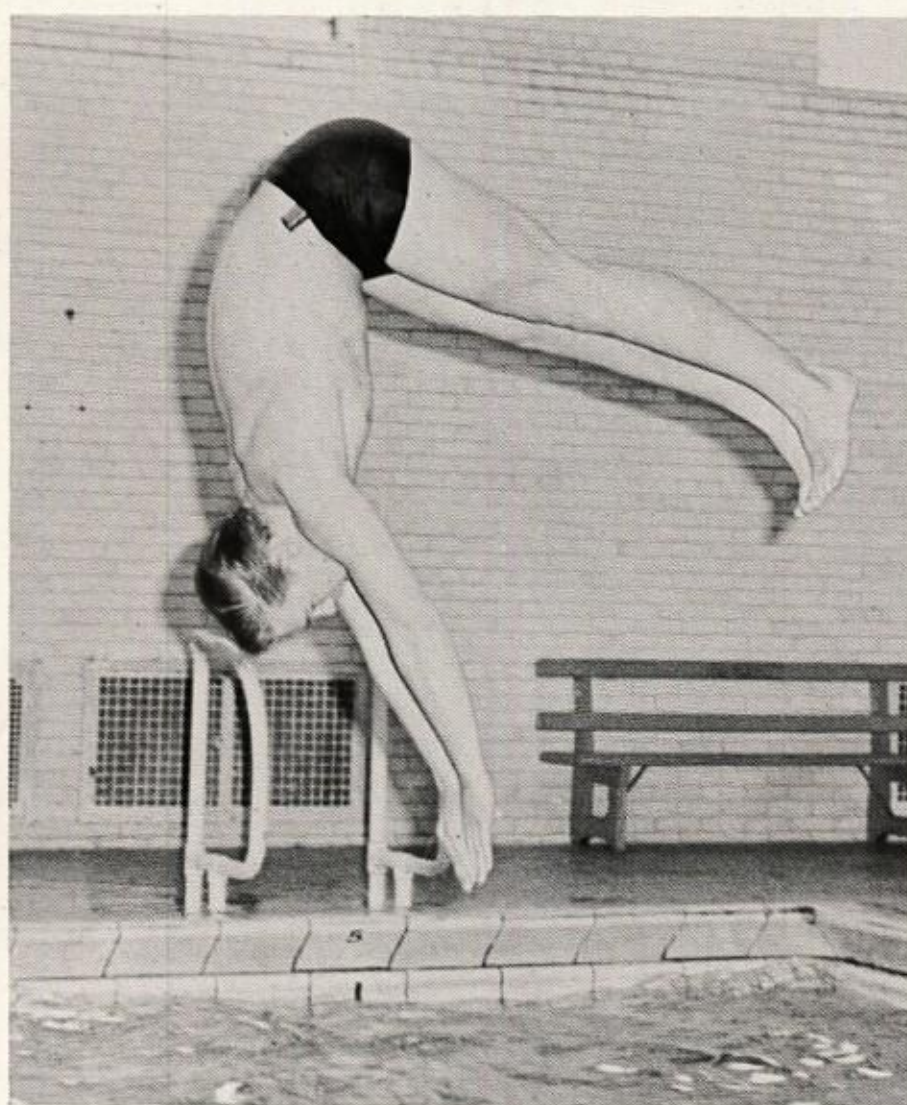

(L-R) Bottom row: Larry Smith, R. Goldfarb, Coach Piacentino, P. Diamond, R. King, Mark Felber.
 Second row: L. Fedder, B. Levin, I. Kasper, L. Fishman, B. Conan, H. Brenner.
 Third row: R. Messersmith, A. Miller, P. Tornambi, R. Ridges, M. Wang.
 Fourth row: P. Mayer, J. Peltzer, F. Desir, R. Ledderman, W. Gustavson.

SWIMMING

Under the tutelage of Coach Piacentino, our swimming team boasted two 8-1 records previous to the 1962-63 season. Yet, why settle for excellence when perfection is so near? Perfection is what the Mermen set to conquer—and conquer it they did!

Despite the loss of all-city swimmer Krupp and four all Queens men, the Jamaica swam their way to a 10-0 undefeated season. Harvey Brenner and Barry Levin were the most successful newcomers. Undefeated this season were Bill Gustavson, Merrick Wang, and Roy Goldfarb. Goldfarb mastered the newly created 400-yard free style. Jamaica, with its glorious record, easily won the Queens Championship and placed second in the city. Its most significant season victory was the 4-0 win over Bayside. Last year Bayside edged Jamaica out of the Queens title with a 4-3 score. Coach Piacentino believes that our swimmers stand a good chance to capture all-city honors.

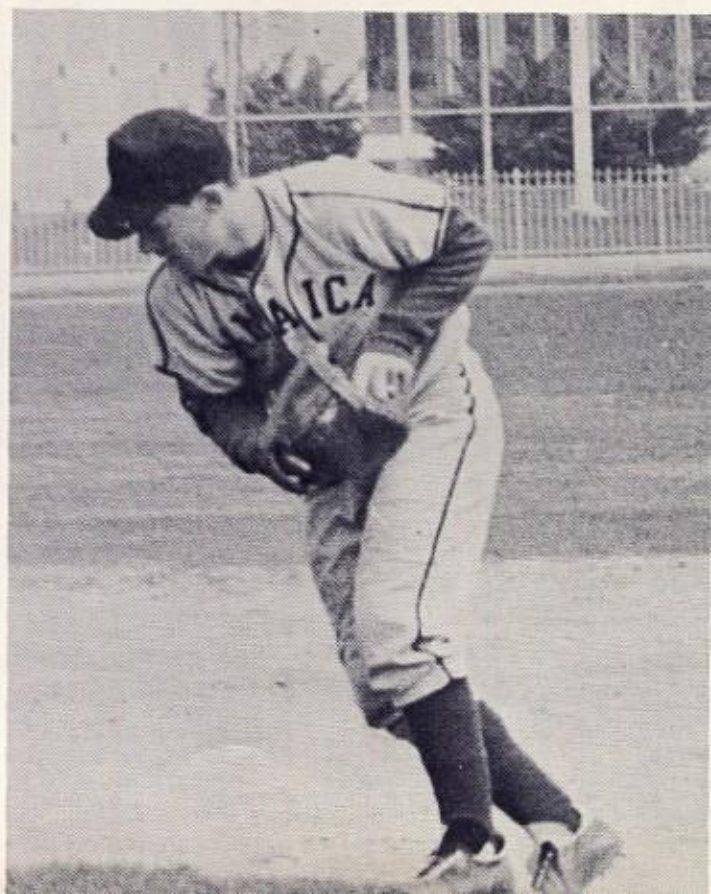

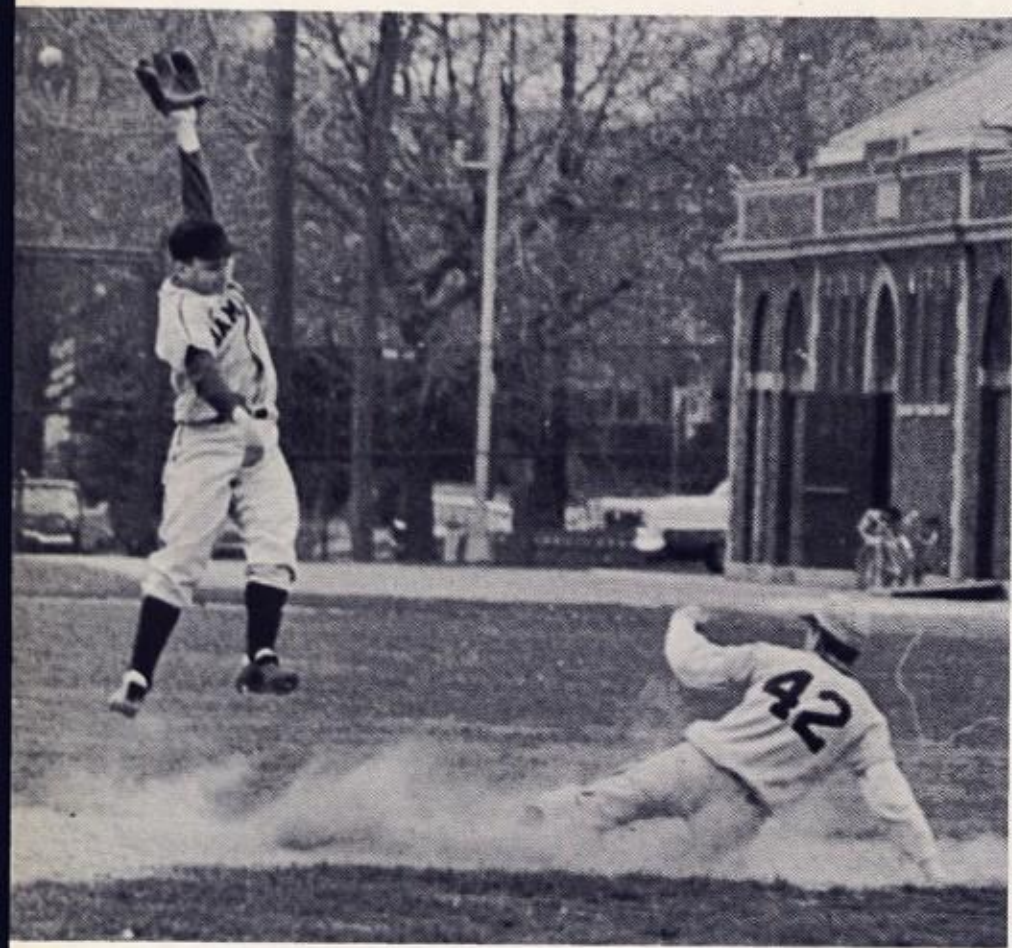

BASEBALL

SOLID INFIELD SHOULD MAKE THE DIFFERENCE

The baseball team is expected to further the string of Jamaica's athletic successes. The team is composed mainly of sophomores and juniors. The only seniors returning were Captain Roman Czula and pitcher Alan Garber. Last year the team compiled a 9-3 record and took second place in Queens. Coach Piacentino was pleased with the strong pitching and catching. This year hitting seems to be the nemesis again. With the Sophomore additions Jamaica is expected to have one of the borough's best defenses. Irving Bromberg and Alan Garber will carry the pitching load. Mr. Piacentino believes that the team can capture the flag if more hitting power is shown. We hope to find this in some of the 30 newcomers that have been working out daily in the gym for the past few weeks.

The anteroom is small and dingy. At the far right one can see a larger office that is flooded with blinding light. Is this a prisoner of war camp or a chamber of horrors from the Spanish Inquisition? No, it is just the downstairs of Lincoln Studios, expert photographers. That is not to imply, however, that this room is not the scene of ghastly infamies. The pictures of smiling cherubs that gaze down on one from the wall belie the sinister goings-on that sinisterly go on. Most of the year, Lincoln Studios is a Dr. Jeckyll-type institution, but, each November, a score of Mr. Hydes are imported to photograph the seniors graduating from neighboring high schools. During that month the clicking of camera lenses and the shrieking of children who have just received their proofs can be heard day and night.

I, too, had my pictures taken at Lincoln Studios. I think my appointment was for 3:00 A.M., but I really do not remember. After a short banal interrogation conducted by a short banal clerk, I was sent downstairs. There I saw a group of girls dressed in prim, simple, black sweaters, and skin-tight, flesh-colored pants. The boys I saw were wearing immaculate suit coats, jeans, and loafers or torn sneakers. I was soon ushered into the actual studio and thrust onto a small stool, where I was pushed and pulled and spun and posed. I made a sincere effort to be cooperative, but the photographer spoke no English and I could not interpret his monosyllabic grunts. For my first picture, I was posed for about ten minutes. When the photographer was finally satisfied, he snapped his fingers. I jerked my head, he took the picture, and began to blaspheme. Afterwards, he just spun the stool and took the picture wherever it stopped. After four such poses it was made known to me that I should put on a gown and mortarboard. Unfortunately, the only gown available was too large and the only mortarboard was large. The oversized robe did not look too bad, but the point of the cap came down the bridge of my nose in a style reminiscent of the helmets worn by the Sheriff of Nottingham's soldiers. Thus attired, I stumbled back into the studio, where I was pushed and pulled once again.

The entire episode took only half an hour, but the reverberations shall continue to sound for years. When I received the proofs, I was stunned by the thought that I might actually look like the person whose photographs I held. Moreover, enemies whom I had lost track of six years ago flocked to tell me how "wonderful" I looked. I was also placed in the middle of a heated controversy between the experts of my family. The subject of my proofs dominated all conversations (except when food was served). The instructions to "return promptly" were disregarded as my parents flew in relatives from all over the continental United States to pass judgment on me. It was finally decided that one of the more innocuous photos would suffice and it was sent to the studio. Though the song is over, the melody lingers on. On stormy nights my family still gathers around a glowing fire and discusses "those pictures." I know that someday I shall recover. With my luck I shall return to normalcy just in time to have my college graduation pictures taken.

ON SENIOR PHOTOGRAPH

BLACK TROPHY

Michael Tramontine sat on the edge of the sofa that faced his trophy cabinet full of silver and gold cups. Before him on the coffee table sat a bottle of Crown Royal twenty-five-year-old Scotch. Beside him sat a young blonde creature wearing a bit too much eye make-up.

"What's that little one in the middle for?" she asked him, pointing a little unsteadily to a small dark loving cup.

Of course, he could not tell her what it was for — she would have had him committed — but he would remember that race to his dying day.

He had begun his career in racing on the California Formula Junior tracks. Quickly working his way up through sports cars and the big Grand Prix machines, he became the top G.P. man in the U.S.

Just four short months after his first Grand Prix win, at Riverside, he experienced his first crash. He had become groggy on a practice lap at Bridgehampton, and crashed into a tree, bending his Cooper beyond repair. He laid the blame for that one on fumes leaking from a faulty manifold. But there were other accidents, many others, that came closer and closer to snuffing out the brief career of the brilliant Tramontine.

Then, one night while he relaxed in front of the television, waiting for the Late Show, the telephone rang. Or he thought it rang. As he picked it up, he realized that there had been no sound. Nevertheless, there was someone on the end of the line who offered him a challenge to a race, a very private race. Tramontine was brief.

"Where? The Freeway? All right.

"When? Tonight, at twelve, right.

"The stakes? Of course, I should have known."

He lit a cigarette on the third try, and called his mechanic at the garage.

"Jerry? Mike. Listen, could you have the XIX ready for me tonight? Yeah, I'm crazy, but I'll be there in about an hour. Thanks."

When he arrived, the car was sitting just within the doors, alone now in the vast garage. It was a brand new, white and beautiful Lotus XIX Monte Carlo, with a purple competition stripe and a black "7" on the doors and hood. He got in, started the car, and drove through Los Angeles to the Freeway. It was strangely deserted. He rolled to a stop and sat on the headrest above the seats.

After ten minutes and two cigarettes, his competitor's lights appeared in the distance. They were tinted red, and as they came closer, he saw that they belonged to a Porsche. It rolled alongside. The engine screamed like a thousand lost souls. There was no driver.

Tramontine sat down and put on his goggles and helmet. At some signal, both cars screamed away, their rear wheels leaving four black skid marks on the road that are still there. As the road hurtled by, the two cars matched each other perfectly, braking for braking, drift for drift, gear change for gear change. The road suddenly dissolved and became a tree-lined section of the Nurburgring. The Porsche could out-corner the Lotus, but in fifth gear at 145 miles per hour, the Lotus had the speed edge. More than once, the Porsche cut viciously in front of Mike, nearly forcing him off the road. He had always detested German cars and drivers.

Now they were at Le Mans, rounding the Maison Blanche corner. Now at Monaco, side by side through the harbor chicane and straight. When the course became Riverside, Tramontine felt more confident. He was at home here. On turn seven, he cut the corner very sharply, forcing the Porsche to leave the road as the Lotus' front wheel lifted from the road and went over the grass verge. The Porsche rammed a fence, bounced twice, and burned.

The air was sweet for the first time in a long while as he drove home on the Freeway.

The next morning a small parcel was delivered to him. When it was unwrapped, he found a black trophy that smelled of burnt rubber, asphalt, and methanol. It burned his fingers when he picked it up. It was still warm.

"What's it for?" the blonde asked again.

"Forget it, Sugar — it's a long story. 'Nother drink?"

SO LITTLE TIME

Suddenly, I become conscious of the ticking of my clock. My eyes, heavy with sleep, open for a brief moment. It is time to get up and to face a new day. I could go back to sleep for a few minutes, but with the insistent tick tock, tick tock, tick tock . . . to remind me that precious seconds are slipping away, I don't dare. I finally lift my weary body from its warm and comfortable nest. I drag myself into the bathroom to wash and dress. Returning to my room. I notice that already late hour: with no time to sit and eat, I grab an apple and am off to school.

There, a buzzer replaces the ticking of my clock. Innumerable times during my day at school, a monstrous buzzing sends the student body into a frenzy. Everyone jumps from his seat at the signal, dashes to his next class in order to get there on time. The classes themselves are a race with the clock. There seems to be just enough time to put a lengthy homework assignment on the blackboard. Before long, my school day is over, and I make my escape from that rushing and tumultuous world.

I come home and drop my books down on the kitchen table. After a quick snack, I climb up the stairs and seek refuge in my room. My ears, sensitive to the sound, immediately pick up the ticking of my clock. All is quiet except for the tick tock, tick tock, tick tock. . . .

I sprawl on my bed and launch into the tedious chore of homework. It is taking so long. How will I ever finish? Tick tock, tick tock . . . I can't bear it anymore. I bury the clock under my pillow.

Once again, I open my books, but can't concentrate. My mind begins to wander. Quite unexpectedly, I hit upon a somewhat frightening thought. Looking back over the weeks, months, and years of my life, I suddenly realize how fast everything is going. It seems as if only yesterday . . .

"Mommy! Daddy! Look, I'm riding a two wheeler all by myself."

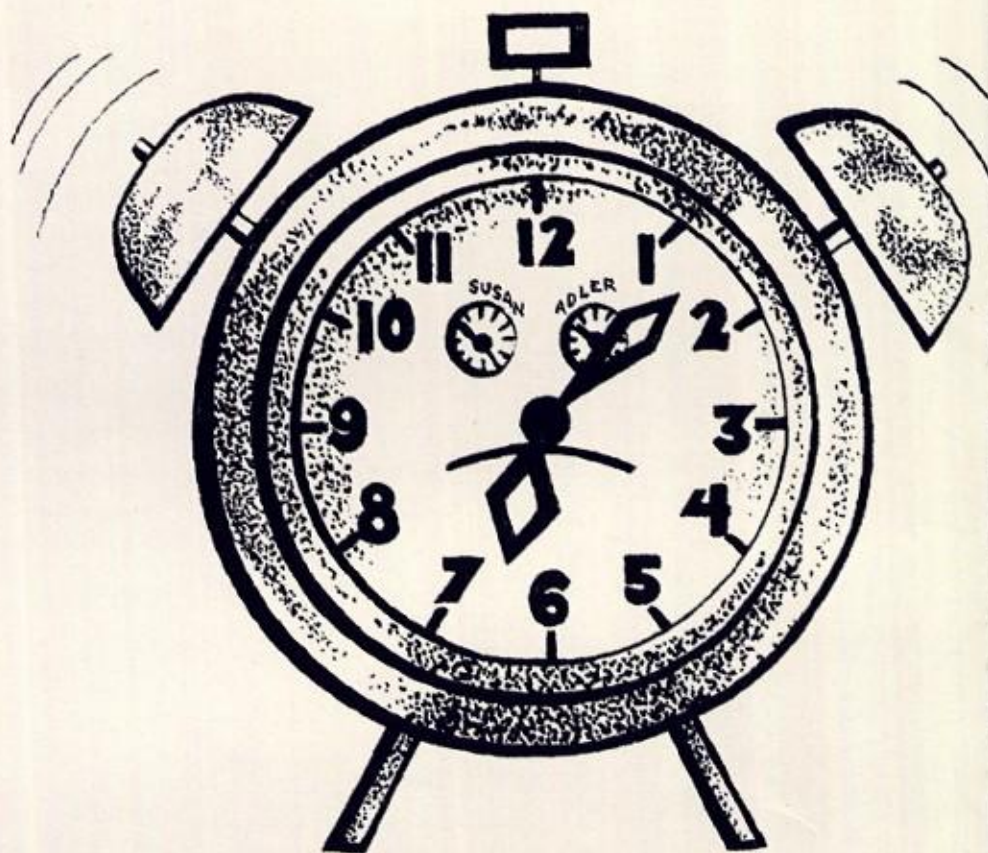

"Why can't I wear make-up? I'm old enough. All my friends do."

"I can't believe it. We're going into high school. I've heard it's hard."

"I'm so mixed up. I don't have the slightest idea which college I want to apply to."

How often I've told my piano teacher I'd call her to resume my lessons, and never did. How often I've planned a whole day's activities and found that when night drew near I'd accomplished next to nothing. How often I've returned from the library with a number of books to read, and twenty-eight days later brought them back without any knowledge of what was to be found between the covers. How often I get this feeling that I know so little and start looking for courses to take. I plan and plan and plan but . . . so little time.

More than anything else, I long for time to sit down and think without being disturbed. There are so many questions which, time and again, I must push into the background. How did this complex thing called "Life" come about? I have questions which are even closer to me which I haven't had time to think about. Who am I? Why was I put on this earth? What is my purpose in life? These are questions only I can answer and must answer, yet . . . so little time.

Tick tock, tick tock, tick tock . . .

ASPIRATION

If I were He
And radiated majesty,
Then could I bloom flowers in December
And warm a wintry day with a sparkling sun.
Then could I cool the thick summer air
And blow a flimsy breeze from a cloudless heaven.
How grand I would be
If I were He.
And as the earth nurtured happiness,
Then could you say,
 God, I love Your earth
 and Your flowers
 and all that is Yours.
So would I have you love me
As myself.

Although I am unfamiliar with many scientific concepts, I am by nature a scientist. I tend to view things in a scientific light: analytically and practically. As a scientist, and a student of the history of science, I can appreciate the enormous complexity and development of scientific principles. Nearly every scientific concept, invention, or technique is merely an elaboration upon preceding ideas or experiments. A prime example of this dependence is the work of Isaac Newton. Even he, perhaps one of the greatest men science has ever known, could not simply sit down and invent. Ideas did not spring out of his head full-blown. For example, his concept of gravity employed and reinterpreted the concepts of Aristotle, Gilbert, and Kepler.

Now we can discern the major differences between mechanism and vitalism. The mechanist viewpoint is based upon the belief that man is a biological phenomenon that can be explained in physical and chemical terms. Therefore, mechanists believe that man, the machine, will build upon the past and present to determine the future. The theory which contradicts mechanism is known as vitalism. The vitalists believe that life and all biological phenomena are due to a vital force, which is distinct from chemical and physical forces. Vitalists believe that man, because he is not a physical machine, can choose his goals and therefore his future.

Vitalists state that science can not create life. However, scientists have recently synthesized a virus, the tobacco mosaic, which exhibits one of the basic properties of life—reproduction. I believe that it is only a matter of time until science synthesizes more complex forms of life, thus destroying the vitalists' viewpoint.

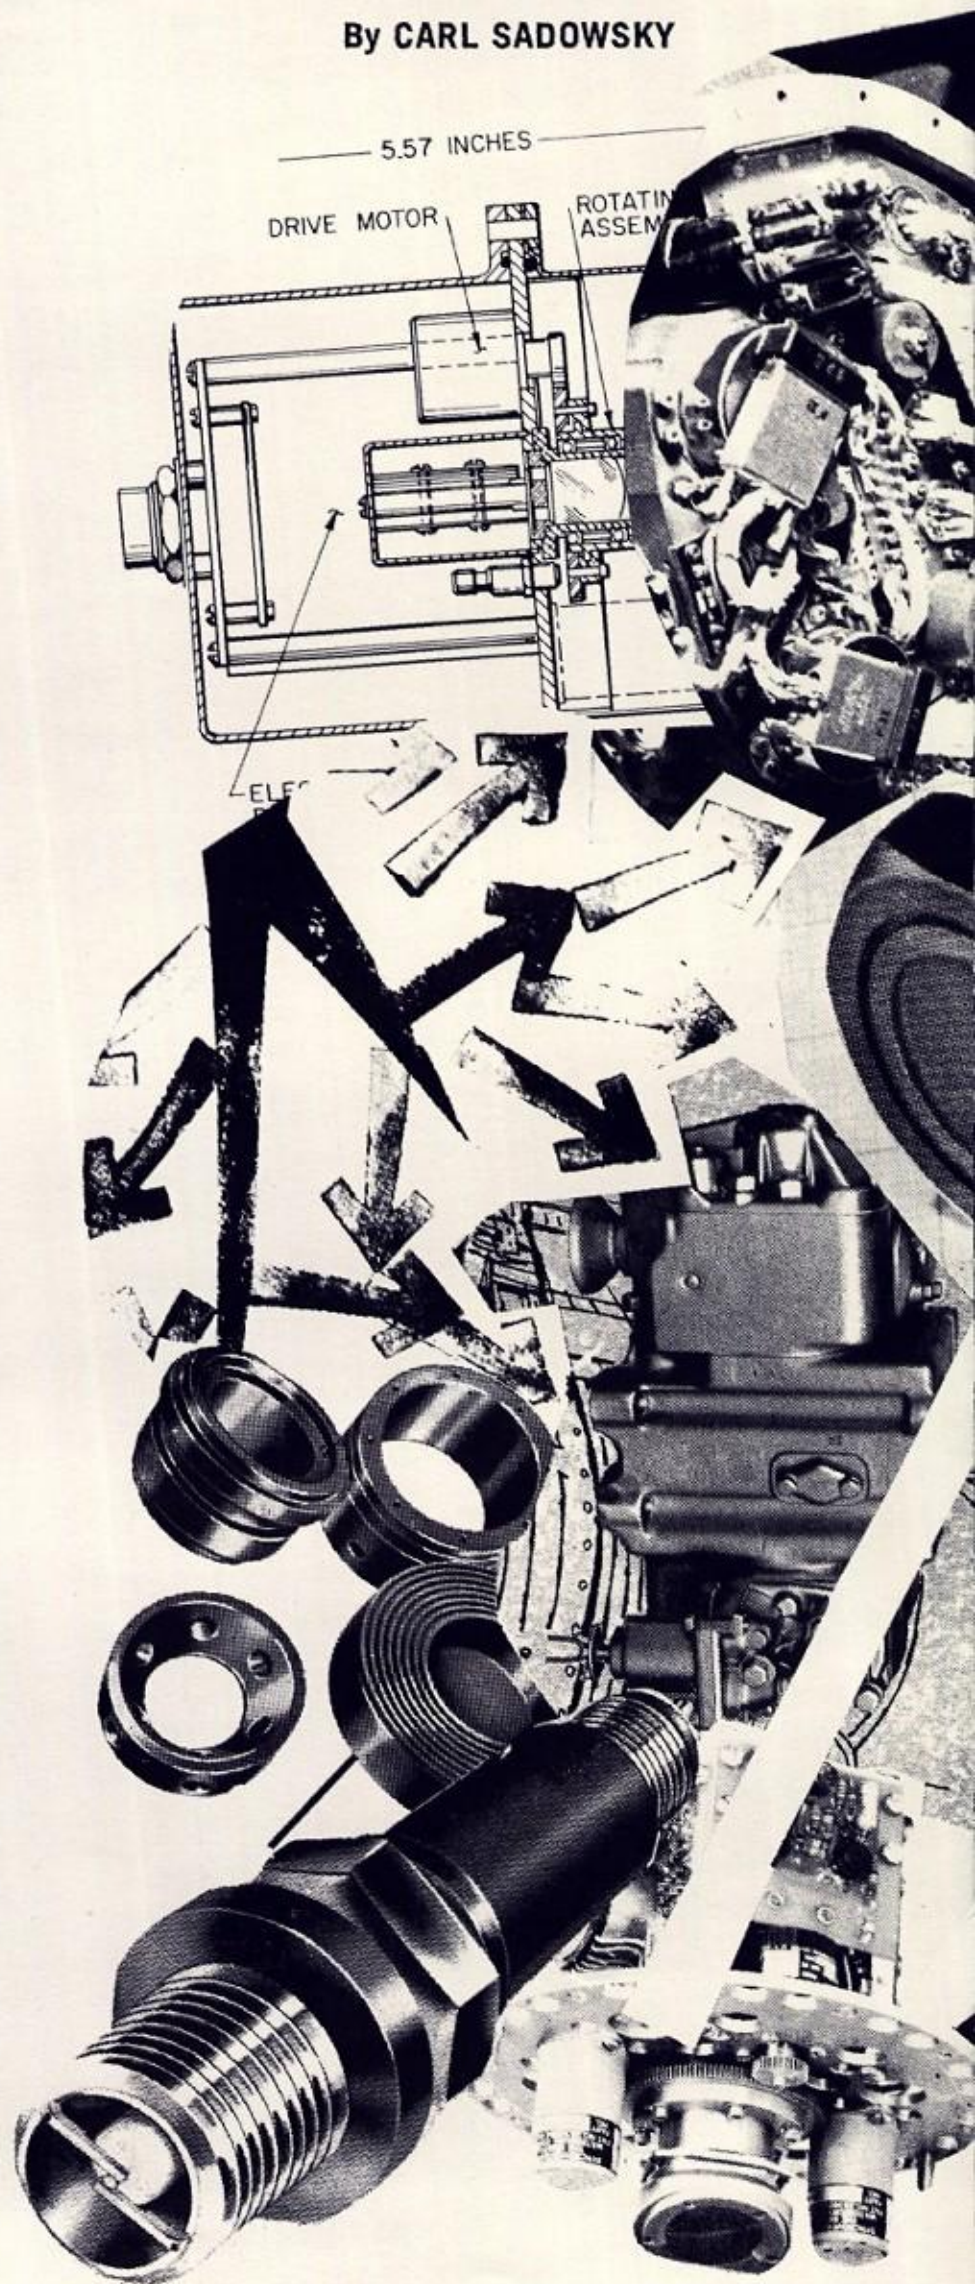

The main argument of the vitalist is, How can mechanism explain our emotions? Although this is by no means a simple question, the mechanist theory does contain an extremely good response. Our emotions are determined by our environment and conditioned by the past (which is one of the basic mechanist viewpoints). Our feelings of love and hate, benevolence and malevolence, happiness and sadness, are just an extension of our past feelings and emotions. We are not born with fixed emotions. We are conditioned by the civilization in which we live.

The scientist (in a broad sense every person who argues logically is a scientist) must be a mechanist. A scientist must view his studies as being caused by preceding events, otherwise he could not calculate, employ relationships or proportions. In fact a strict interpretation of vitalism would amount to the complete deterioration of math, science, language, the entire realm of knowledge as we know it. According to my reasoning, if we accept the belief that humans are not governed by physical and chemical principles, and that human behavior is explained by future events, how could we possibly know that $2+2=4$ in the future, or that "I" is a pronoun denoting first person singular?

The vitalist viewpoint is antiquated. Its advocates base their arguments entirely upon emotional views. In the light of modern scientific experimentation (e.g., properties of life—reproduction. I believe that it is to accept mechanism.

CASE FOR MECHANISM

By CARL SADOWSKY

ILLUSTRATED BY RICARDO WILHELMSSEN

As a supposedly intelligent, reasonably well-informed teenager, I accept with a rather blase attitude many of the truly remarkable feats of science about which I read. That is, when I read of an achievement such as the Telestar satellite, I may be filled with respect, admiration, and possibly excitement, but never awe. Some bio-chemical research and experiments inspire in me the beginnings of a realization of the enormity of even a minutely scaled ability to alter and to possibly reproduce the creations of nature. But even so significant an achievement as the apparent synthesis of the tobacco mosaic virus fails to lastingly convince me of the capability of science to create life, and therefore I cannot hold science in awe.

Because I cannot hold science in awe, I cannot believe in mechanism. All my logical faculties point to the conclusion that scientists will eventually be able to synthesize living creatures. From my limited background and knowledge of scientific achievement, it seems reasonable to me that man is merely a series of chemical and physical reactions governed by complex laws which may eventually be discovered. The daily increasing familiarity of the scientist with the structure, functions, and nature of the parts of the cells would seem to indicate an eventual artificial cell. As a result of the very few and very simple experiments I have done in labs, I am aware that environment can have a great effect on a reaction, and my reason can therefore conceive even of the mind being governed by a series of chemical and physical reactions.

However, it is my reason alone, and not my emotional aspects, which can accept this idea. Why can I not go one step further and assume that my emotions themselves are complex, scientifically explicable reactions? All I can answer is that I am afraid to entertain for long the possibility that there is no Force which is ultimately more powerful than some brilliant bio-chemist of the future. Perhaps some deficiency in the temperature or pressure of every room and every region that I have ever inhabited makes it impossible for me to want to make myself accept the conclusion that I have logically reached: that the spark of life is no more than a closely guarded secret which man may conceivably unearth. I am afraid that since, to me, this admission cheapens the value of life, it makes my blind, undefined personal faith in some unknown Guider a sham. I refuse and fear to believe that these things are so, because if the miracle of life, in effect, dwells in a test tube, so do poems and music and love. If that is the extent of the preciousness of things so sacred to me, I intend to remain in blissful ignorance until science achieves the power to make me react differently.

REJECTION OF MECHANISM

By LOIS AMBASH

The mud oozed down into the trenches. The terrifying noise grew louder, slowly, but with conviction. Men could be seen running amidst a confusion of flying objects. They fell, and their hearts beat stronger and louder. Their eyes showed fear and the noise continued.

The pigeons walked peacefully through Central Park finding it necessary to stop only when a passerby offered them some peanuts or breadcrumbs. Their serenity could be disturbed, however, when a pedestrian would unthinkingly throw a half a bag of peanuts to them all. Most of the children held balloons. It was sort of a tradition. Besides, the helium filled ones were practically exclusive in Central Park.

A few elderly men sat on the stiff benches playing checkers. The opponents were proficient through years of practice, so the rugged competition prolonged the games considerably.

The horses rounded the curved sidewalks with an air of indifference, yet confidence. The young couple in the carriage were having a bitter argument. Its violence clashed with the contented surroundings.

The crystal water reflected dancing needles of sunlight, its glossy surface disturbed only when a rowboat went smoothly by. Two young boys had drifted onto the rocks at the edge of the lake and were having a terrible time warding off the wasps and hornets while trying to row free.

Beneath a leafy oak, a baby was crying. The mother tried to comfort it, but to no avail. The father regarded the situation dubiously, wondering whether he wasn't too young to be married.

The lion roared behind its steel cage. The monkeys cheeped incessantly. The skunks scampered around responding with a repulsive odor to anyone who ventured too close. The bears growled continually — hungry and unhappy. The zoo could be heard throughout the park.

That burning, beating noise had reached a crescendo and then, slowly, as it had come, it died away. The mud had succeeded in filling the trenches. The men had ceased to run. Hearts stopped beating and the aspect of the men was not one of fear, but peace.

The pigeons walked on in their search for food. The old men remained sitting, giving undivided concentration to their checker games. From the carriage, the young couple emerged gaily and walked away holding hands and smiling. The boys had floated adrift from the rocks and were quite upset over the amount of valuable rowing time lost while stranded. The baby let the lollipop drip all over its face — its father looked hopeful. The animals were being fed and the zoo was quiet.

Ellen

By DAVID SHAPIRO

I met Ellen on a boat ride. Her hair was messy and she wore an old blouse and dirty shorts. By the end of the day, I had mooched half a sandwich and found out that she was a tall, blonde, nut. I usually go for those crazy type people, and Ellen was the most. I met her again at a picnic where she played the guitar and sang Tom Lehrer with a Southern accent. I called her a few times after that, but she was never home. (Once she answered and I said Ellen? She said, Yes! I said, This is Dave, and she said, I'm not at home.) Then she went to Cape Cod and the summer ended. A few weeks after school began, my fraternity (Now you know it's fiction. High School fraternities don't exist) decided to have a date party and I asked Ellen (naturally). Well, she said Yes and I was surprised and I washed my face about four thousand times and poured on what pitiable cologne I had. I wanted to wear a tie, but it just made it look as if I had a dirty line down the middle of my sweater so I didn't. Anyway I left my house (a wrong side of the tracks hut) about 6:00 and got to Ellen's at 8:00. I walked up the walk (intelligent) and on to the porch. There were three doorbells: Classical, Popular and Jazz. When I pushed one, the bells chimed out "Alexander's Rag Time Band." It took about thirty minutes and still no one answered the door. (I later learned that Ellen's mother had come to the door but couldn't raise her hand to the knob because of all the diamond bracelets, etc.)

When the maid did open the door I almost collapsed. I mean, the house had all different levels, with money oozing everywhere. It wasn't showy, but it was the kind of simple classic furniture that costs a thousand dollars a footstool. Ellen's mother showed me to the formal room or something like that and tried to make conversation. She must've thought I was retarded. I kept on repeating "Duh" over and over again. A couple of minutes later Ellen came down. She was wearing a short green skirt with a jumper sort of top. Underneath the top she wore a longsleeved sweater that was close around the neck. Her hair cut across one eye and fell almost to her shoulder, then, as if it had changed its mind, turned around and came up a little. She looked about 19 years old and I felt like withdrawing into my shell. Beautiful as she looked, my eyes immediately went to her feet. She was wearing shoes! That sounds like sort of a stupid thing to say, but I had secretly been hoping that she would come barefoot. (Ellen, if you remember, was a TALL, blonde nut.) I never realized just how tall Ellen was until I stood there cringing beside her. Before we left, she said something in French to her mother and the mother pointed at me, fell on the floor and started laughing hysterically. We gently stepped over the convulsing body and left (by way of the three-car garage).

We didn't get to the party until about three quarters of an hour later and we were the last ones to arrive. As we walked down to the basement I took a quick look to see who was there. I could see Ralph and Jane, Richie and Norma and that's all. When we got to the bottom of the stairs I saw everyone else. Ronnie was already at work on his date and I knew just how big a mistake this party would prove to be. I mean, you were supposed to bring a date, not a friend. I couldn't even dance with her. I'd have to put my head on her shoulder. We sat and talked for a while and I wasn't having such a bad time except that I knew she was miserable (that always has a sneaky way of dampening your spirits!). I looked around again and saw Joan and Ann and Carl and Marcia. Marcia?! Couldn't be. (If the reader be confused, let him realize that Marcia is a girl who hated me with a passion in the sixth grade and whose dislike has not dwindled.) It was Marcia, but I really didn't care. I would just ignore her. God knows, she wouldn't come up to me. But, alas and alack, Ellen knew Marcia. (Knew? She adored Marcia!) I suddenly felt this Herculean pull and I flew across the room landing at Marcia's feet. Witty fellow that I am, I made some brilliant remark which met with a hostile glare from Ellen. Marcia just gave me a pitying sigh. The night quickly degenerated from there. Ellen wanted to stay with Marcia and her date, and so everything I said was torn to shreds. The worst part was her laugh. I would say something and Ellen would laugh at it, but Marcia would laugh at me, a laugh with a steel edge that made me feel naked. Except for the hour that Ellen fell asleep, the party went quickly and it was all over pretty soon. We left with Richie and Norma (Marcia had left earlier—thank God) and I took Ellen straight home. At her house we talked and joked around a little. She was still laughing when she said "so long." Even with the laugh it sounded a little final. I walked to the bus stop, came home, and that's it. There's really no punch line. I just wrote it so that maybe Ellen will read it and not feel so bad.

FREEDOM

A tall, blonde, German soldier, wearing a very trim and proper looking uniform, spoke to them, slowly and precisely: "You will do everything the soldiers tell you to do. It is for your own good." Then he stopped, turned around, and walked away. The soldiers ordered everyone to stand up and then led them, double file, into a foreboding looking building about 200 yards from where they had stood.

When they entered one of the rooms, Sol heard screaming and saw panic break out as a hissing sound filled the room. "Those rotten butchers are going to murder us!" shouted someone beside him. "Ah," said Sol as he breathed deeply, "FREEDOM."

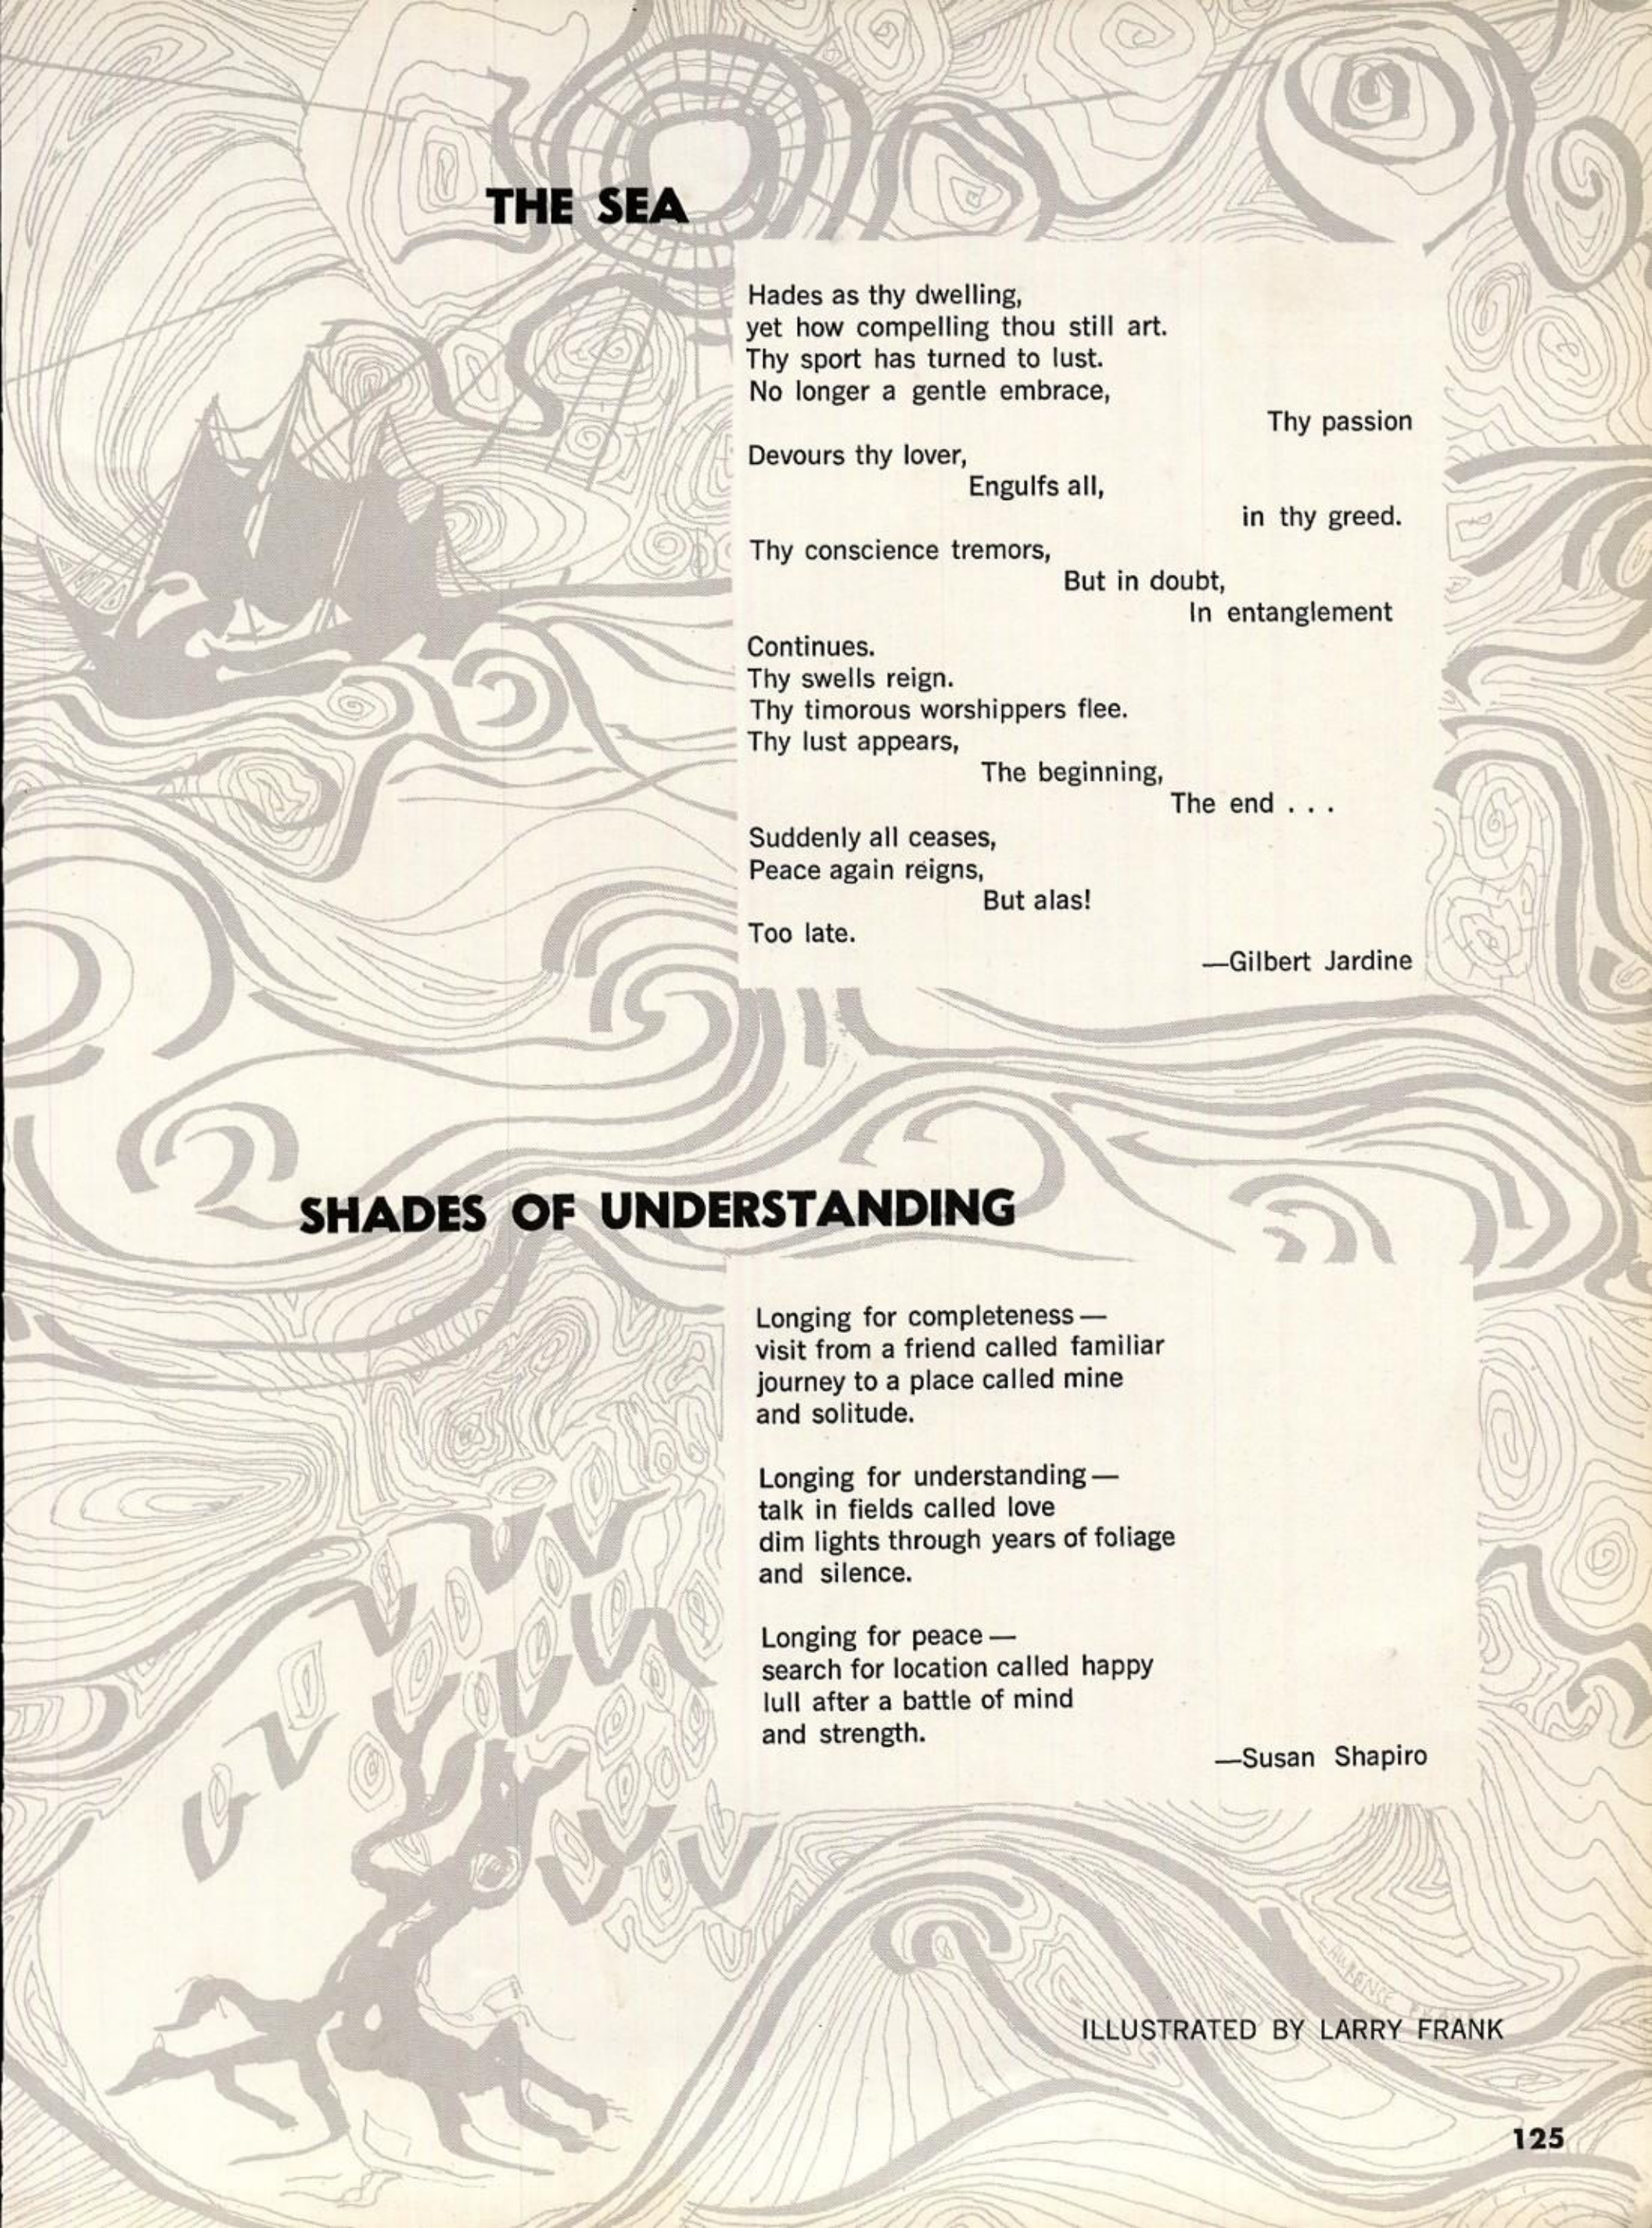

Sol Goldberg looked at the emaciated faces of the people around him. Some of them he knew very well, some of them were strangers, some Catholics, some Protestants, some Poles, but most of them were Jews. Here they were, after years of physical and mental torture. They were here now and they were going to get what Sol had been praying for throughout these many years: FREEDOM.

The faces of the people blended in with the surroundings as Sol thought of the outside world. He couldn't remember exactly when it started; all he could remember was that suddenly he couldn't go to the same stores as other Germans. He couldn't buy the same goods, he couldn't go out without a yellow star, he couldn't—all of a sudden he felt a sharp pain in his leg. He snapped out of his daze to see a German soldier kicking him. "Ah," Sol thought, as he weakly rose to his feet, "just a little while longer and then FREEDOM."

THE SEA

Hades as thy dwelling,
yet how compelling thou still art.
Thy sport has turned to lust.
No longer a gentle embrace,

Devours thy lover,

Engulfs all,

Thy conscience tremors,

But in doubt,

In entanglement

Continues.

Thy swells reign.

Thy timorous worshippers flee.

Thy lust appears,

The beginning,

The end . . .

Suddenly all ceases,

Peace again reigns,

But alas!

Too late.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED TO THE HUMANITIES AND SOCIAL SCIENCES AT JAMAICA H.S.

Today, our entire society is geared towards evolving an educational system in which science and mathematics will be the mainstays of learning. Not to be eclipsed by other neighborhood's fast-rising star, Jamaica High School has been doing more than its share in shamefully neglecting the students who wish to study the humanities and social science.

How could such a system evolve in this "enlightened" age? Everyone should realize the tremendous importance of the subjects which deal with people as their primary concern and motivation.

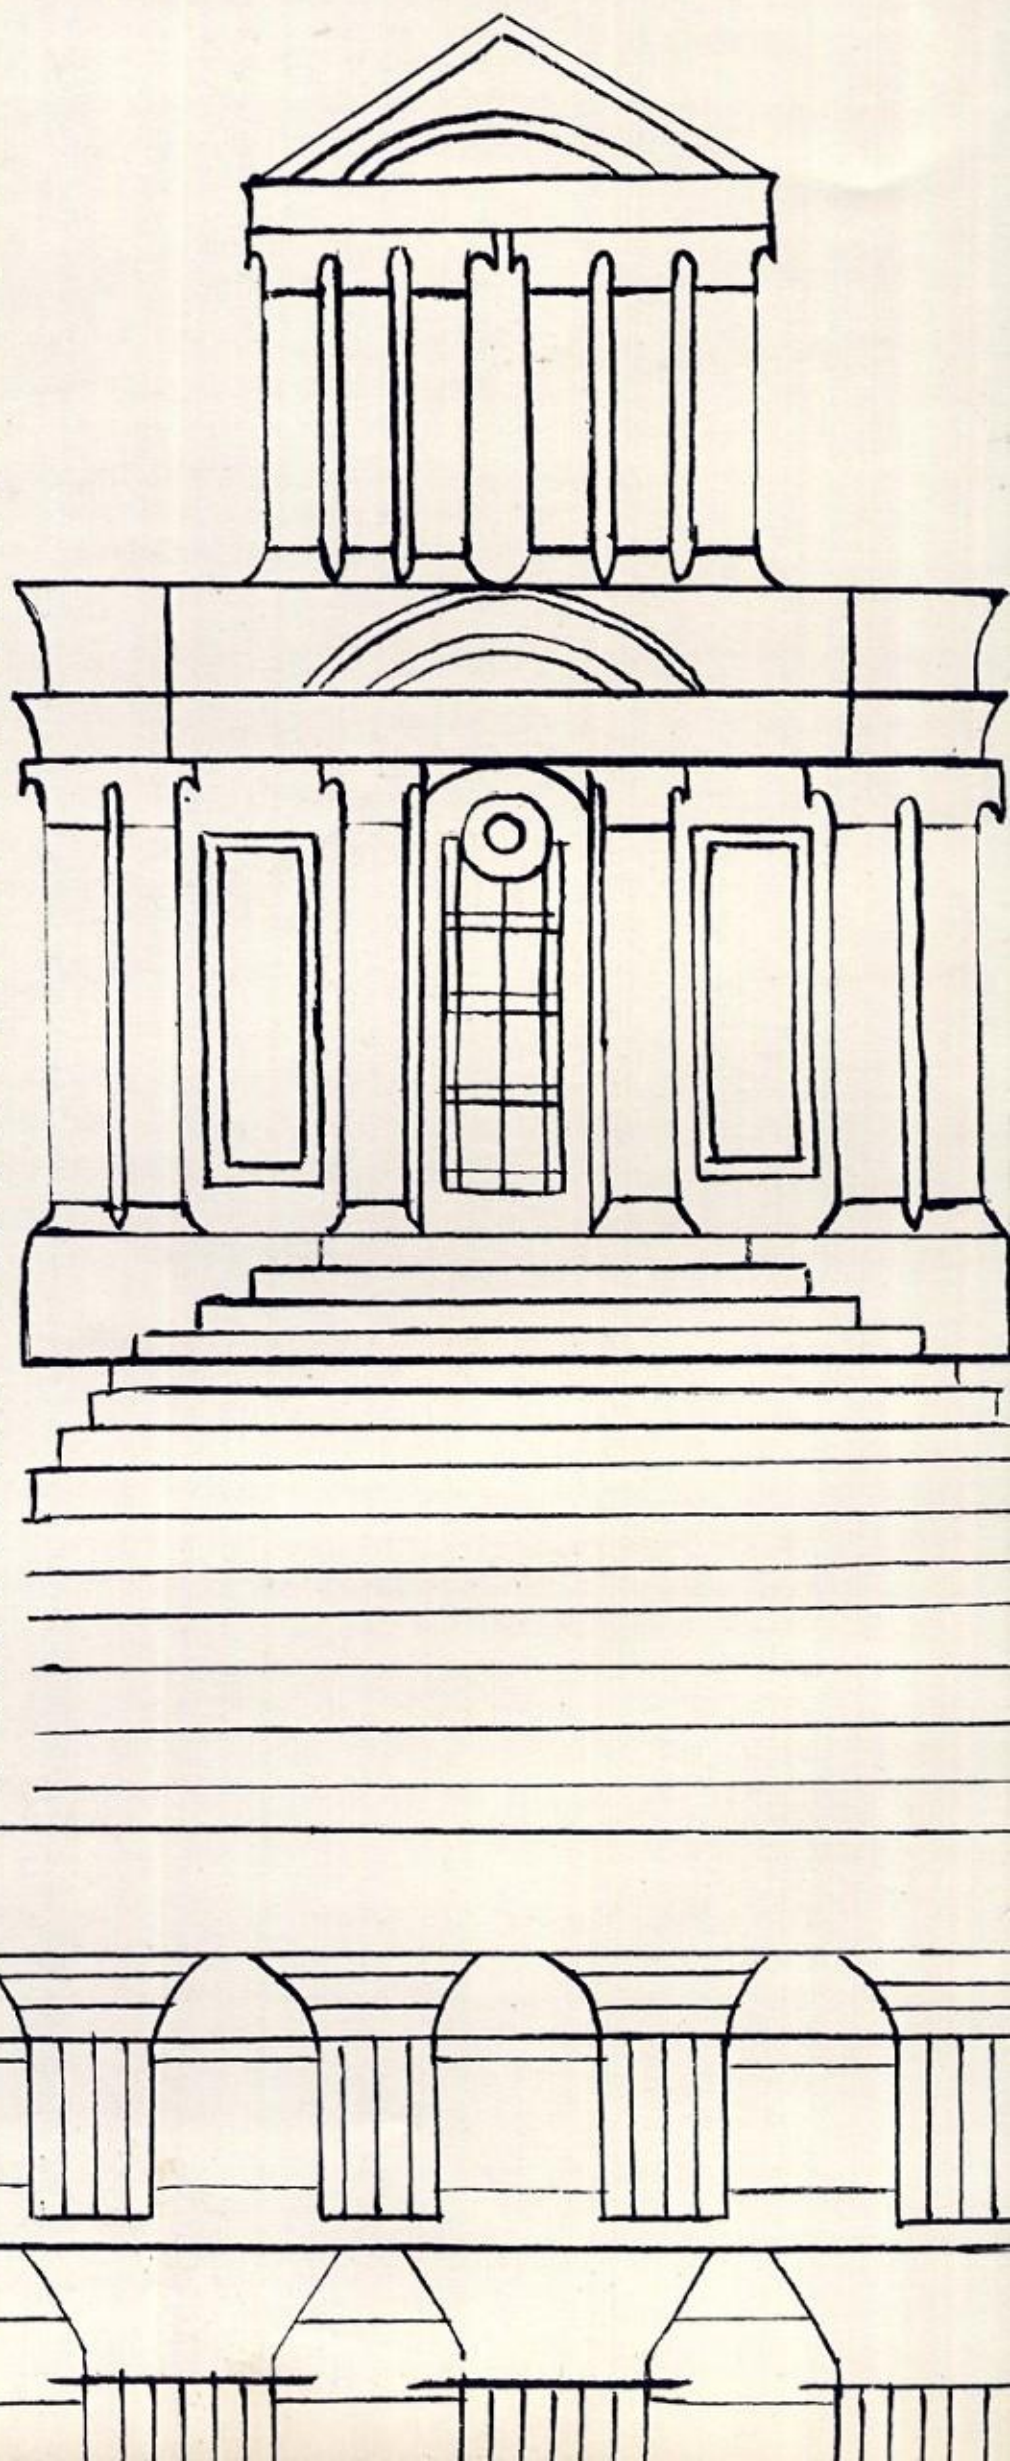

Why can't sociology, psychology, and religion be introduced in the curriculum at Jamaica? "Much too radical?" say the educators of today. However, I submit that their inclusion would tend to be reactionary. The teachers in Ancient Greece, the home of Western civilization, realized the importance of these subjects. Students were taught to raise questions, then find the answers to them. A theological discussion might easily follow an inquiry regarding a deity. It should be apparent that many advantages are included in such an improvised curriculum. It permits students to develop their reasoning faculties and gain academic knowledge through self knowledge.

What can be done about the problem before us? Nothing less than a complete reassessment of our educational system, followed by its revision, will be of any positive value. A cross-roads should be established, with paths leading to fields in science and mathematics and others to the humanities.

We in Jamaica High School should be keenly aware of the importance of the humanities. The faculty, including some outstanding personnel, offers opportunities for the development of a dynamic program in the humanities. This staff could certainly arouse the administration from its lethargy with respect to such a program and encourage the initiation of suitable courses in the curriculum. If we wait too long, we may find that the obstructions and debris on the road to the humanities will be the rubble of our civilization.

BALLAD ON THE INEVITABLE

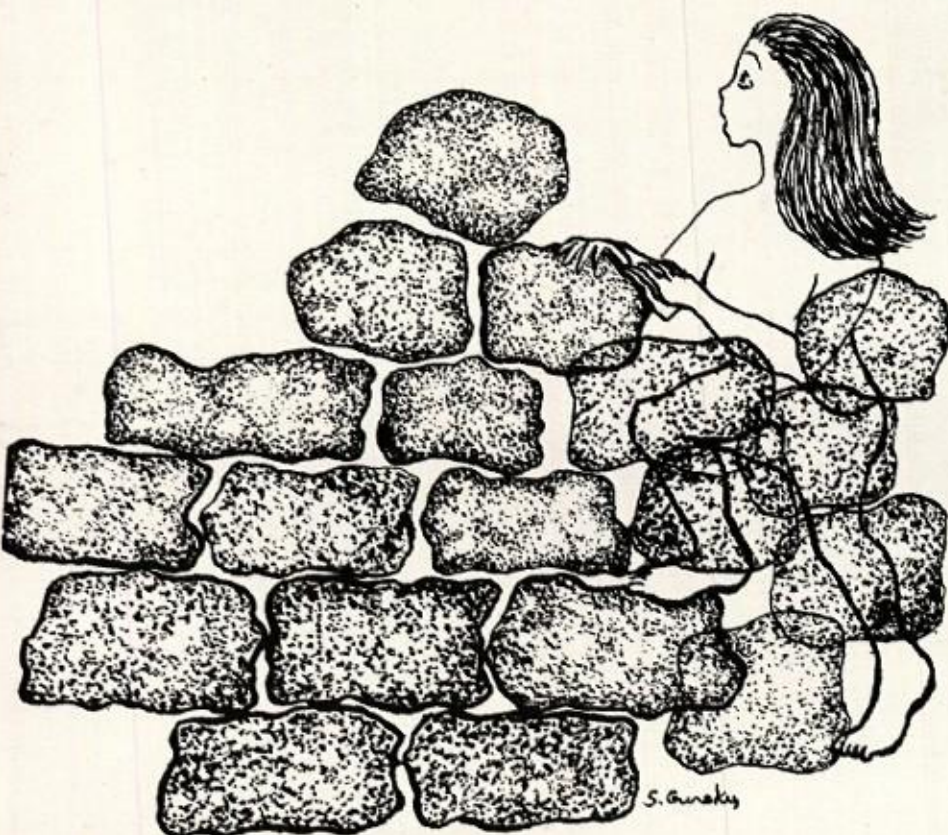

Brick upon brick in pre-planned form,
Girder to girder in a cubic swarm,
Building 'round building—a mountain of warmth,
A bottle of bourbon, a slug of rum,
What comforts to body, what comforts to soul
But still the same the cold winds come.

Rays from the dim bright winter sun
Knotted and tangled on their earthly run,
Hardly a spark, just a bit of warmth,
The body is heatful, the mind is numb,
Inferno-fires will always stand
But still the same the cold winds come.

A hearth kindled with burning wood,
Death lives where life once stood;
A pagan gift to the god of warmth,
Men in a parade, a pounding drum,
The burning flame of a Chopin waltz
But still the same the cold winds come.
ENVOY

Civilization — a growing fire,
Owl cries in the mouths of the dumb;
Knightly garb on the back of a squire
But still the same the cold winds come.

very very healthy, or very very ill.

Life is perfect, or all wrong, when you are very very young, or very very old.

I am young and healthy and she wasn't, yet the last time we met, she smiled and I couldn't. She asked how I was, and I couldn't answer. How could she die?
Didn't she know she was part of my life? How could she die and not even let me be sorry without being selfish? How can you mourn someone who has found peace for the first time in years? She is resting now — her body doesn't ache, she doesn't have to smile.
I have to smile because I am young and healthy and life is almost perfect. It isn't perfect, though — she is dead.

ELSEWHERE

I was never very popular in school. Everybody liked me, sure, but there weren't dozens of boys trekking to my door to plead for dates. You always heard from all quarters, "Myra is a great kid," but no one ever took me to a dance or to the movies. Actually, I guess the problem was boys. If there had been just one... but there never was. I used to spend hours on the phone listening to the accounts of my girlfriends' social lives with all the sordid details. It was the next best thing to having it happen to me. Anyway, this, in short, is how I spent my junior year in high school. Yes, it was miserable. I guess that's why this summer was so wonderful.

I worked in a day camp. I was really afraid when I started. My first day was a week after camp had opened. Everyone seemed so firmly entrenched in the scheme of things, that I felt a little lost. The other counselors had already paired up in that one week's interval, so I was introduced to Sam and Joy, Bob and Cindy, Paul and Barbara and so forth. There really seemed to be no openings anywhere, but they were nice. Even after a whole week had passed, no one had asked me my age or average. That was a switch, a welcome one. Yes, things began looking up. I think the summer changed me slightly. Or perhaps it just made me a happier person. Whatever it was, I soon found myself plunging into a whirlpool of fun in camp social life.

The other counselors were older, at least college freshmen. They were different from the high school crowd I knew. Not better, but different. I guess it was because they were older. It wasn't sophistication. They could be inanely adolescent whenever they wanted. I think it was their attitude towards things in general, and towards me, which I enjoyed. They weren't concerned with being smarter or better in any way than anyone else. Maybe inside they were. But they were so involved in having fun that they forgot it. And they liked me! There were counselor parties, and I belonged. I never acquired any boy for "my own," but I could be the gay, flirty Myra that I enjoyed being.

It was really a wonderful summer, a completely new and happy world for me. But it's autumn now and I've gone back to school. I like school and studying, in a way. And I like the kids there too. But they are different. Whenever I find a letter in the mail from a camp friend in college, I am sorry that the summer ever ended. I hope we all will get together over Thanksgiving. Maybe we will, but I doubt it. That's the only sad part about the summer—nothing will ever revive it. Even if I see those friends again, it won't be the same, for we all have gone back to our separate paths. Maybe we'll laugh and reminisce about the summer, but we all know it's over. It's strange how memories of happy things are always so sad.

QUEST

All he could see were stairs, tiers and tiers of exquisitely carved alabaster. The moon's light gave a creamy glow to the stairway and he was careful to brush the tears from his cheek lest they should fall on it. Now that he had been rejected by all, he sought sanctuary here, the place of worship. The gleaming marble edifice was his last hope. From a distance, it looked like one of the ancient Greek or Roman temples (he never could tell the difference). But, when one came closer, one immediately saw its superior beauty. It wasn't gaudy or ostentatious — maybe the best adjective was Godly. Yes, it was Godly, and rightly so. From the sapphire carpeting to the fruitwood altar to the Guider's benevolent face — all Godly. He remembered the inspiring sermons the Guider gave each Tuesday on Sabbath. Just remembering it filled him with a reassuring warmth and quickened his footsteps. It was very late and the sound of his steps reverberated in the still night. He had been climbing quite sometime, and he could still see nothing but stairs. It was right, he thought. It made one feel as if he were approaching God. For a while he thought of the disgrace, trying vainly to push it from his mind. He had done what he thought to be right; he always did what he thought to be right; the Guider had taught him well. This time it had turned out to be wrong. They were so cruel. It was of little importance now, for he would soon recover in the wisdom and warmth of the Guider's heart. He was close. He could see the crimson and gold fringes of the eternal flame. Soon he was standing before the doors, burnished by the flame outside and by God's glory inside. He wondered if he would have the strength to open the doors; it didn't matter though, for they were locked.

TAKE HEART OF GRACE

By JESSE WALDINGER

Tripping over a cobblestone and flipping headlong into a puddle, I examined the sign above the rickety door:

"ARCHIE AND BILL'S MUSIC SHOPPE"

"Peculiar way to spell shop," I thought as I walked into the dingy office. There wasn't even an electric light in the room, but this was excusable since it was only 1870. Two distinguished-looking gentlemen stopped dancing and greeted me.

"You are the man we sent for?"

"Well no, I'm just the repairman, but—"

"Oh, you'll do. This is Archie Sullivan, and I'm that very model of a modern operetta-writer, Sir William S. Gilbert."

"Glad to meet you. What would you like repaired?"

"Nothing at all!" replied Archie. "You see, we're professional operetta-writers, and would like to write operettas on the side. But we need ideas! thoughts! inspiration! —"

Money we despise it,

Many people prize it,

Oh-h-h, willow waly o!

"Gilbert!" snapped Sullivan, "don't get carried away! Now, sir, we were hoping that you, obviously having a vivid imagination, might help us."

I had, by this time, gathered that these were two nuts who would never get anywhere. Nevertheless, I sat down and thought. Mostly, I tried to figure out how to get out of there.

"Will you help us?" Gilbert begged. "Think up some titles."

"Well, how about Iolanthe, or H.M.S. Pinafore," I suggested, rising to leave.

"Oh no," complained Sullivan, "don't be silly. Think of something good . . . something poetic . . . something funny."

"Ah, something funny!" I exclaimed, as if it made a difference. "Gee. My mind seems to be blank today. Usually I'm an expert at making up names of operettas. Something comic. Odd though, I —"

"That's it!" cried Gilbert, whipping out a pencil and pad. "'Something comic. Odd though.' Isn't that poetic? That would make a great title. Now for a subtitle."

"Gilbert!" shrieked Archie. "Don't act stupid. That isn't a good title. It's too big and clumsy."

"Well, we could shorten it from 'Something Comic, Odd, Though' to simply 'The Mikado'."

Now I was certain that this spectacled gentleman was not all there. Especially when he pranced about the room behaving like a wandering minstrel in shreds and patches, of ballads, songs and snatches,

and dreamy lullabies —

but now I'm getting carried away.

Finally, they sat me down and ordered me to think up something else. Still upset over the "Mikado" pun, I sat dumbfounded for a few moments.

"Come on, hurry up," said Sullivan. "We haven't a month of afternoons, you know."

"I'm thinking," I explained. "Have patience."

"You've done it again!" screamed W. S. You're a genius! You're a man of culture rare! Why, what a very singularly deep young man this deep young man must be."

That was enough for me. Amidst the confusion, I attempted to slip out the door, but collided with a panting young man.

"My name is Herbert F. Gondoliers," he said to Gilbert and Sullivan. "I'm the yeoman of the guard of Princess Ida. You sent for me. I've got some wonderful ideas for operettas, but we must hurry. I have another appointment with a band of pirates at Penzance. A man there by the name of Ruddigore wants a trial by jury, and I'm on jury duty. I've wandered all over London in search of your office, and . . ."

While Gilbert, inspired, scribbled like mad, Sullivan rushed up to the young man, singing:

"Poor wandering one, though thou hath surely strayed, take heart of grace, thy steps . . ."

Plunging out of the office, I tripped and flipped headlong into a puddle.

HANDS

A woman's beauty is visible in her hands. My mother was beautiful. Her fingers were long and slender. There was a purity in their whiteness. Her clean short nails were like pink seashells. Tenderness flowed through her fingertips and filled me with warmth and security.

Quickly one winter, her hands grew thin and frail. The hands which had once assured me now clung to mine. I held fast to them, but I wasn't strong enough. Finally our clasp was forever loosened, and it passed to me. I need more time, my hands aren't full grown. I must continually strain in order to grasp it. It must not slip away like some minutes in a day. However, each year I grow a little, and the ache is gradually subsiding.

ON CREATIVE CHALLENGE

ILLUSTRATED BY IRA KALINSKY

It is often asked why men climb mountains, or why Beethoven wrote his great symphonies, or why Aristotle sought truth and motives. The answer to this question lies in man's eternal quest to better himself. The common stimulant is challenge.

There are challenges of many sorts, on different levels of action. We may distinguish between the challenge imposed by the pressures of society and that fostered from within one's person. The outer challenge supplies the fuel but not the fire with which to burn it. Inner challenges arouse a true desire for accomplishment: a bettered life, a wider, deeper, broader experience which is now much more than mere existence.

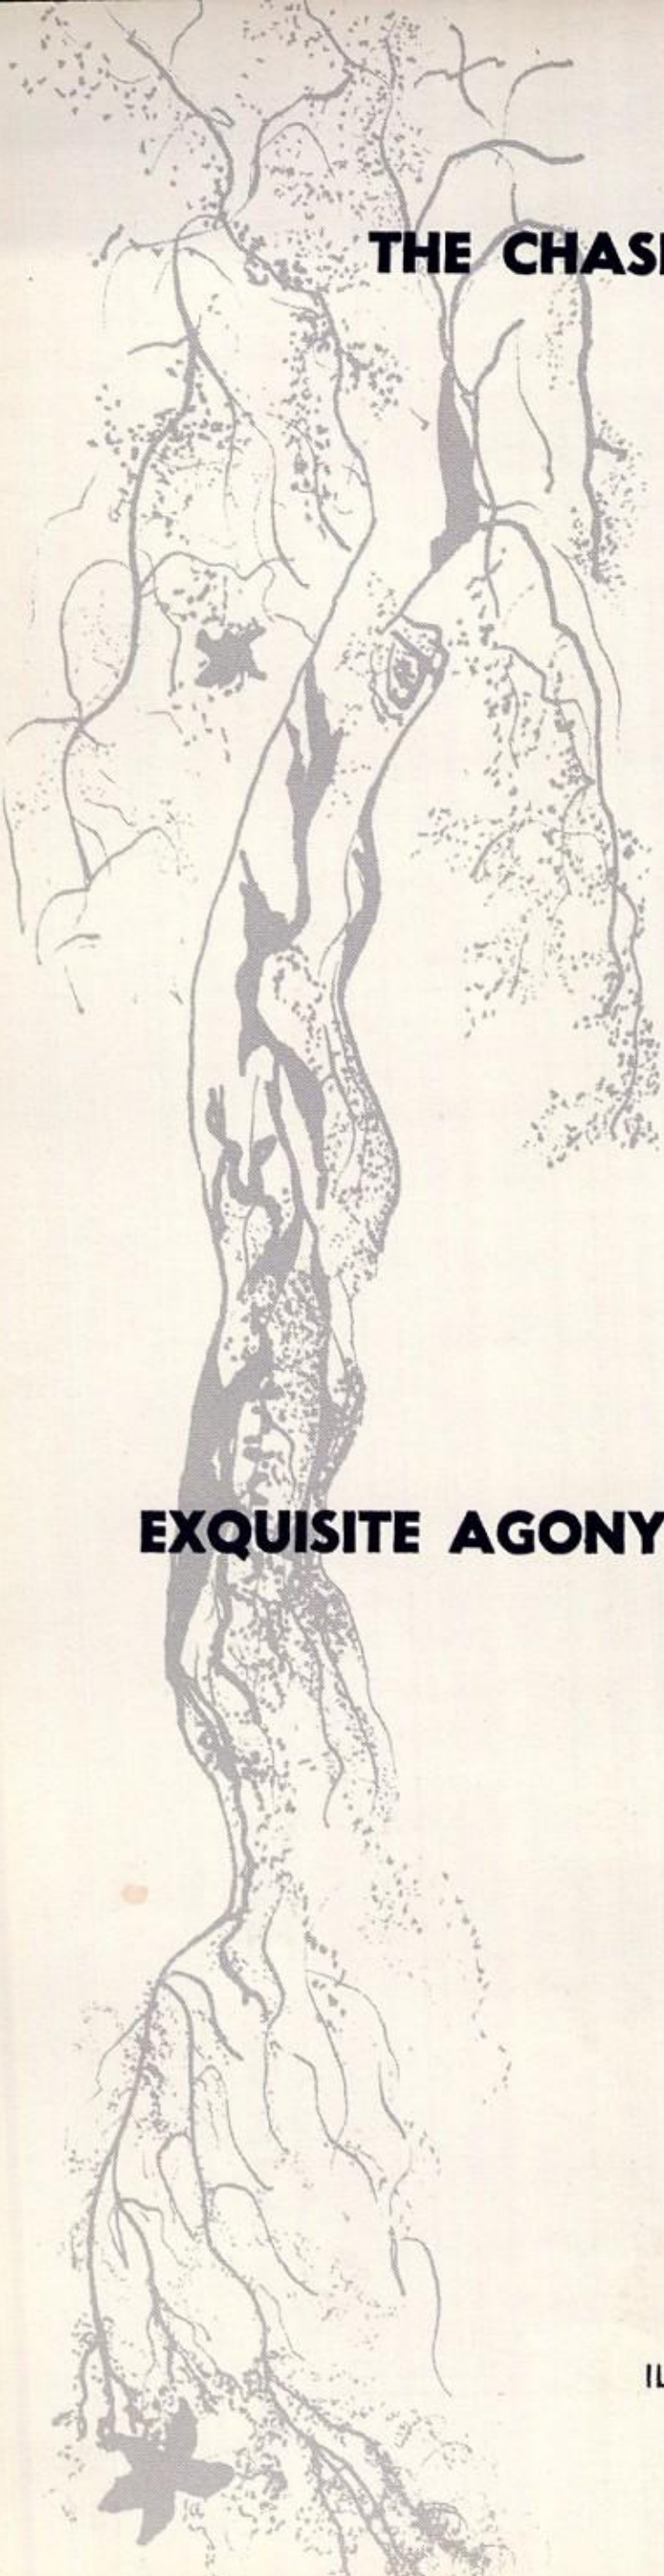

We promote challenges in athletics, wars, religious endeavor, art and literature. Our educational system is based on theories of challenge. The creative challenge is for a noble purpose.

The first revelations began with early science. Others have succeeded it, but real creativity renewed its spark in our world of only the past hundred years. Again, sparks kindled flames—those of smashing-atoms, those of rocket ships venturing into the vastness of space.

Man is classified as an animal. But he is more than such that recognizes only the persistence of outer challenge. He is a being that can invent from nothing and have something, can start from nowhere and arrive somewhere. His power is in the mind and the soul, the challenge. He creates it, choosing from the jungle of society that which he has the inner compulsion to do, and then he accepts his self-made challenge, recognizing the difficulty and perils involved in this encounter. Finally, he conquers that which he created for such a fate.

As we grow more mature we are supposed to choose between challenges. The higher the form of challenge, the more civilized becomes our character, the richer our personality and the more creative our experience. Challenges are the spark of life. He who responds to the spiritual, creative challenge has risen above the plane of vegetative existence. He has taken a wider step, a quicker pace, along the infinite path to maturity, has begun to pay the indemnity for his own creation.

THE CHASE

Battling currents, thrusting twigs and towers from my path,
shattering defiantly the chains, painstakingly forged,
which bound the untamed spirit to a pattern,
rushing furiously, grasping for evanescent rewards,
at last I pause, secure in victory,
to view the grandeur of my prize,
but to learn that I clutch nothingness.

I marvel at the spark that pricks me, as a dagger,
to resume the chase.

—Lois Ambash

EXQUISITE AGONY

Lie, trembling,
in a fancied embrace.
Shriek.
A name will not depart.
Echoes
fill my ears,
rend my soul,
crush my heart.

Taste the cruel kiss of night,
and weep.

A DEDICATION

I always wanted to write a novel. Not because I had a great emotional experience, or because I had something really important to say or even because I wanted the money or fame or anything like that. I wanted to write a novel (at least five hundred pages) so that I could have a long dedication about her. Sure, I wrote stories and essays but you can't put a dedication before something short like that. And she really deserves one.

Her hair is the color of wet sand and it's much too curly. It sticks close to the neck and there's really nothing she can do with it. Her eyes are set too wide and are the nondescript brown that's so dominant over all the lovely greens and blues. She has a short nose with a straight bridge, but her freckles make it look sort of bumpy. Her mouth is little and conservative — the kind that makes a giggle seem very out of place. Her most striking feature is her shoulders. They're warm and understanding, ready to heave with tears of shared sorrow or ripple with shared laughter. Share, that's the word. Gently sloping, they're so willing to share, but always grasp for the entire burden and shrug off all the glory.

There are many with lovelier hair and nicer eyes. Millions without freckles who have perfectly chiseled features. But there's no one as pretty, no one with shoulders like hers. Should I say, "To my dear so and so"? I guess I should, but I'm too embarrassed. Besides, she'll know. She'll skrunch up her shoulders and refuse to acknowledge it's her but I pray to God she'll know.

TIME

One minute you are extracting a small bottle of a radioactive substance from a five-ton block of lead. You have been told time after time that this one bottle could kill everyone in the building.

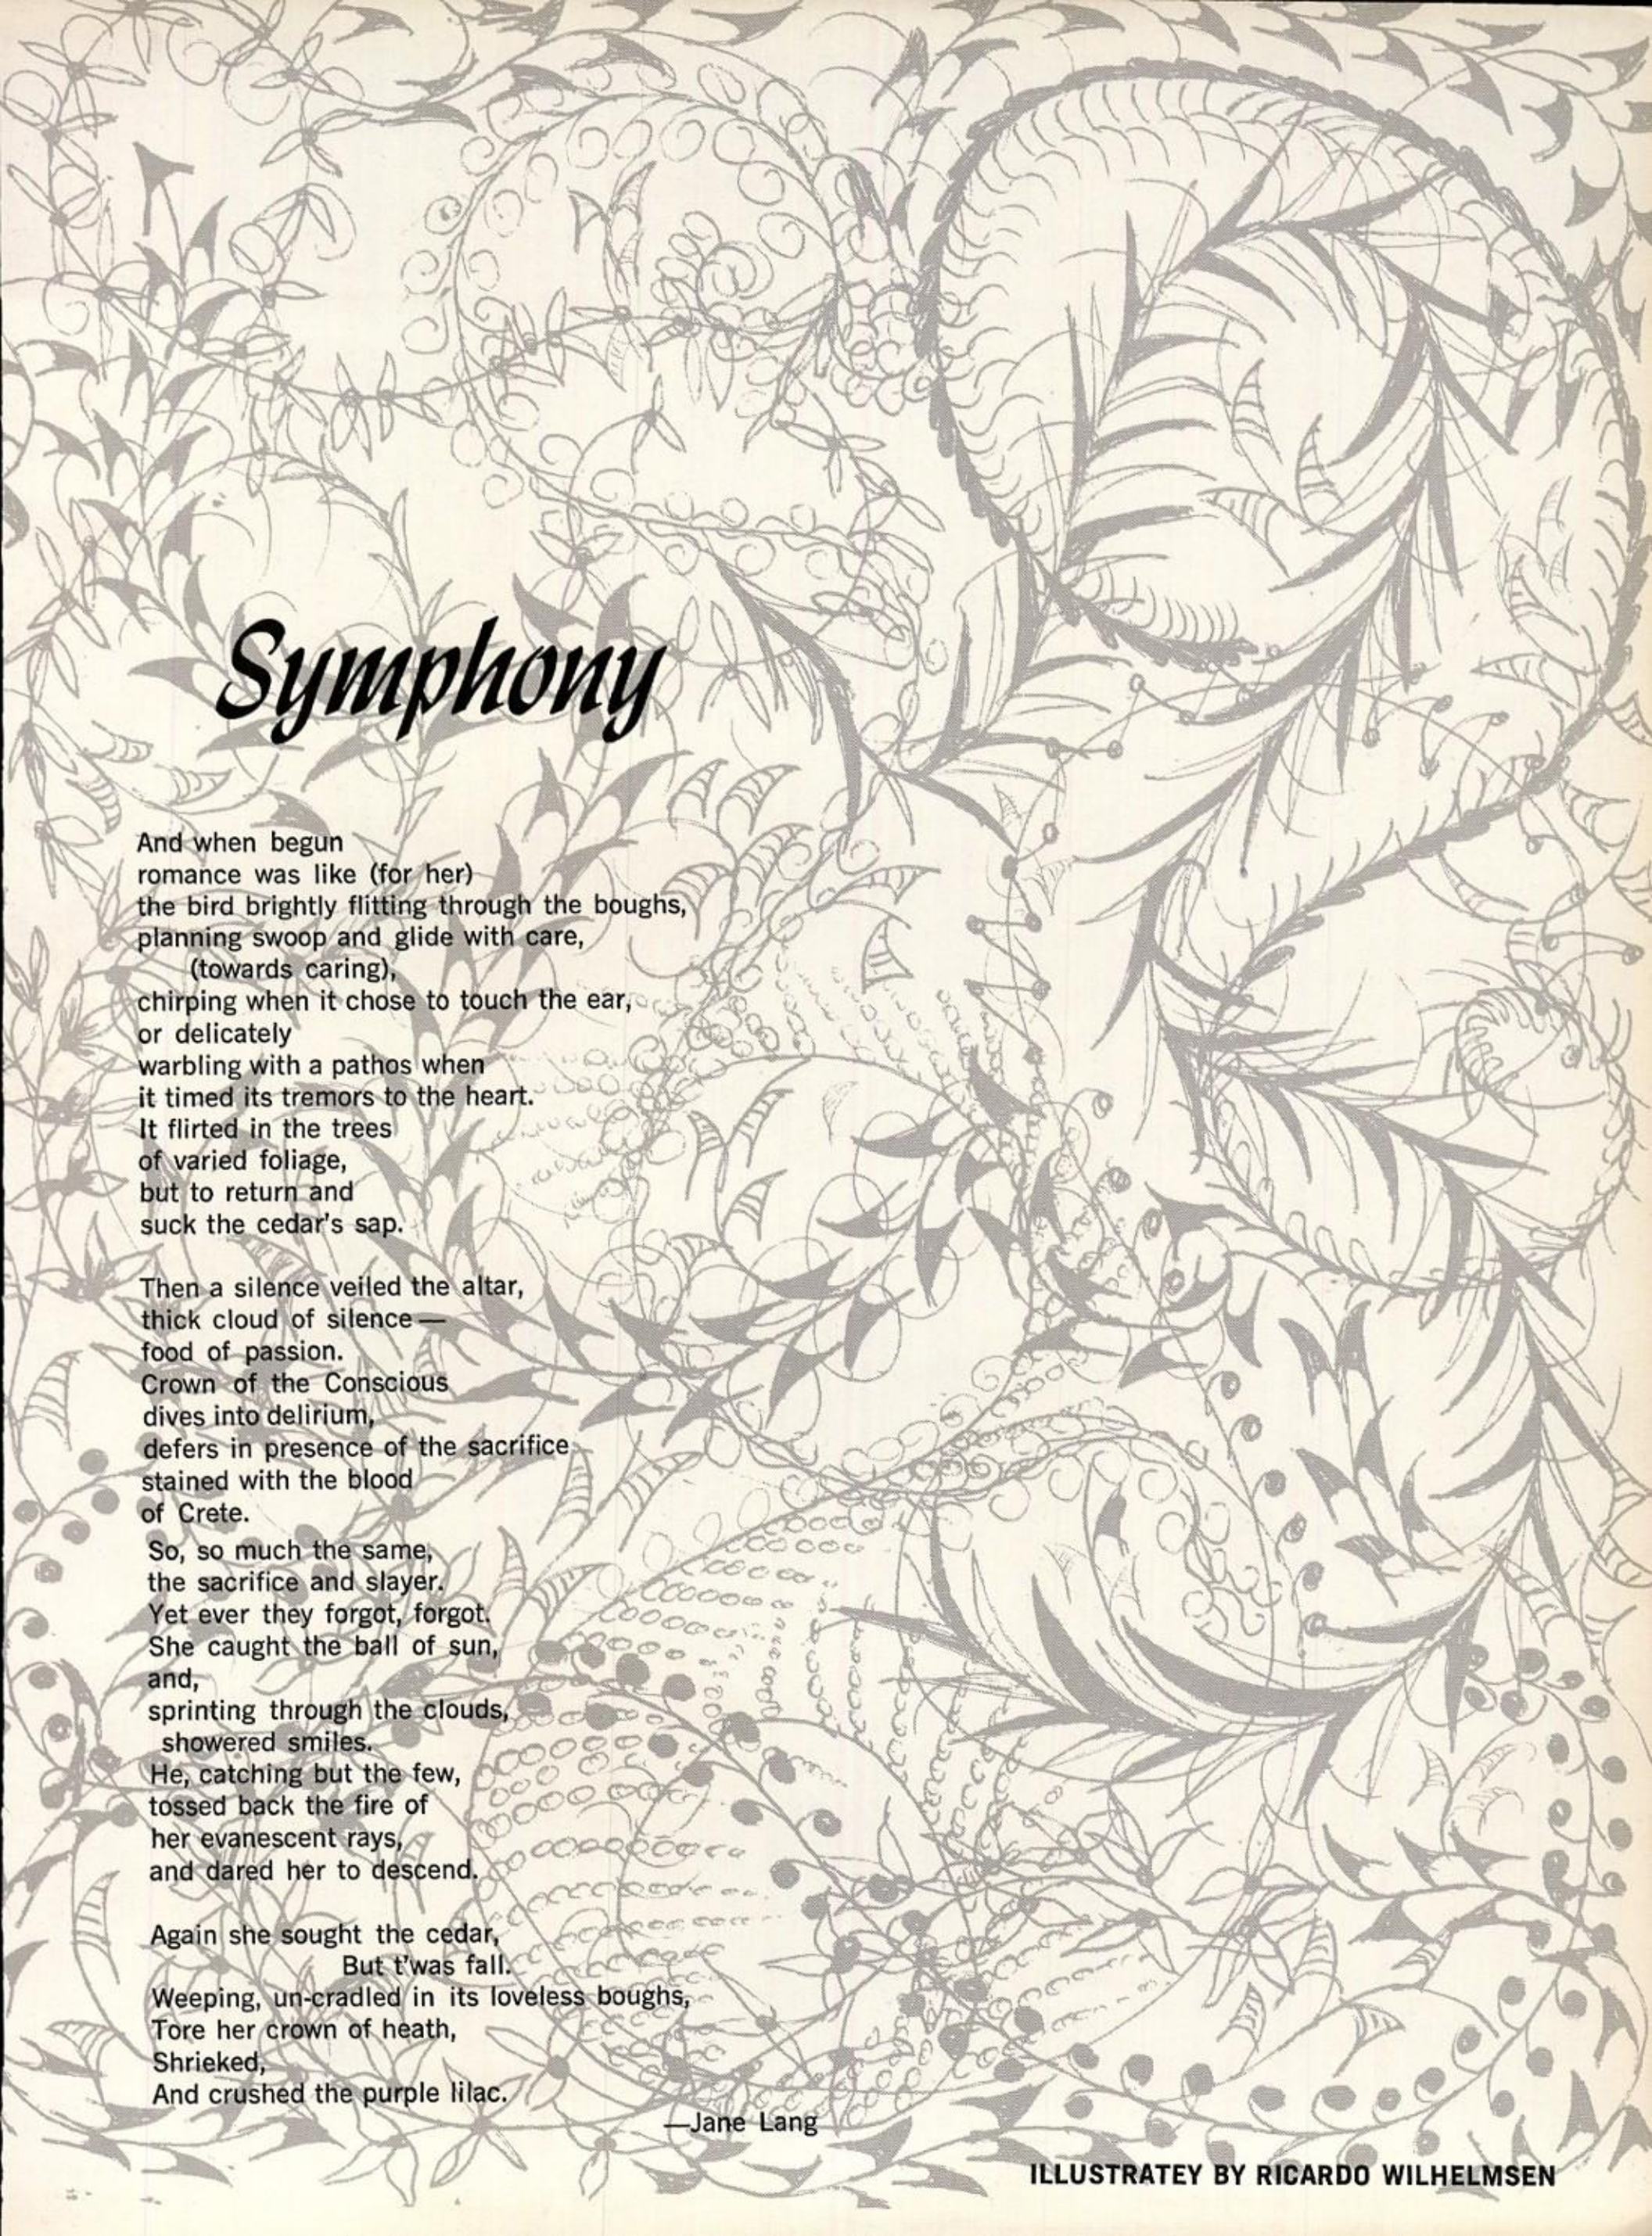

It is automatic, a reflex. You extract it rather carelessly with the two-foot-long tongs, holding it at arm's length. Whistling, anticipating the week-end, the picnic, the fun, the chance to do nothing at all, you turn swiftly. Your finger slips. You fumble to keep your grip on the tongs. You swear savagely, lose your grip entirely, watch with a horribly twisted look of terror on your face as the small bottle which did not exist an instant ago swings up in a lazy arc and smashes on the concrete floor, soaking you with minute droplets of that harmless substance which did not exist, which they had warned you about to keep you from drinking it, which will kill you exactly twelve minutes after being absorbed into the body through the skin.

You laugh; after all, it's just candy, and one of the boys has told you it will give you a stomach ache if you eat it, and he will come along and eat it himself later. But you really don't laugh. Your mouth is dry and you are on the desert, you look at your watch and you have ten more minutes to catch the bus home.

You are feeling faint, and you realize that that's the solution. You have only to catch the bus and go home. You are back in the room, the wretched fluid slightly, ironically sweetish on your lips. You make a mad rush for the door. You dash downstairs, looking for someone, something. The place is deserted. You look at your watch once again. Your ticket for the train is good for only eight more minutes. And suddenly you realize. It's all true. Your head begins to ache slightly. So you're not going to miss that ride after all. You look at your watch. The hydraulic press is beginning to squeeze you. The pressure is becoming unbearable. Four minutes left. Time is closing in. Then you ask yourself the question, you wonder why you can't shave a little off each minute and call it something like a minute. So you have five again, but then again you have four, but this time a little faster. You look at your watch again, but this time you have only three and an eighth minutes, real minutes. But then you keep looking and you only have two and three quarters. You step off the edge of the curb in a preoccupied manner, your eyes glued to the second hand of the watch. You stumble. You are pulverized beneath the wheels of a moving bus. You have missed your train.

Symphony

And when begun
romance was like (for her)
the bird brightly flitting through the boughs,
planning swoop and glide with care,
(towards caring),
chirping when it chose to touch the ear,
or delicately warbling with a pathos when
it timed its tremors to the heart.
It flirted in the trees
of varied foliage,
but to return and
suck the cedar's sap.

Then a silence veiled the altar,
thick cloud of silence —
food of passion.
Crown of the Conscious
dives into delirium,
defers in presence of the sacrifice
stained with the blood of Crete.

So, so much the same,
the sacrifice and slayer.
Yet ever they forgot, forgot.
She caught the ball of sun,
and,
sprinting through the clouds,
showered smiles.
He, catching but the few,
tossed back the fire of
her evanescent rays,
and dared her to descend.

Again she sought the cedar,
But t'was fall.
Weeping, un-cradled in its loveless boughs,
Tore her crown of heath,
Shrieked,
And crushed the purple lilac.

TO SOMEONE I KNOW

I'm not the smartest girl in the world, or the luckiest, or the prettiest; I don't have the most clothes, or the most dates, or the most friends. These things are more or less true of ninety-nine and forty-four one-hundredths percent of the people I know; I have a lot of superficial things in common with them. I even parrot the words of the Ivory Snow ad just as they do. I don't know why, but it always used to hurt to find that in other than the superficial things I was also considered to be like everyone else. I never should have expected anyone to think that I was special, except maybe my family, and they just don't. That's one way I'm different from most kids in my school: they're all their parents' darlings. My parents have always kind of taken my good marks and any of my achievements for granted. They say that they expect good things from me and so they never get too excited about them. I used to try to change their attitude, but when I realized that there was nothing I could do, I decided to get someone else to sort of adopt me. You know, I wanted to be someone's little sister.

The idea of having a big brother really appealed to me, especially since I had picked out the boy whom I considered a sister's ideal. I had known him for several months and had become quite friendly with him. He was almost two inches shorter than I, but since he was almost two years older as well, he never seemed small to me. He wasn't too good looking, but very smart and popular, and he always seemed to know what he was doing, and where he was going, and why. I immediately developed complete confidence in him and often asked his advice and opinions on everything from my program to my poetry. One night, at a party, I told him that what I had always wanted was an older brother, and he gallantly volunteered his services. And so now I am somebody's little sister.

It's funny, but I think I worry more about my big brother than he does about me. I constantly tell him not to stay up until all hours studying and I'm concerned when he can't forget about the girl whom he's really liked for so long. I give him advice just as often as he gives it to me, although I suppose he doesn't accept it as readily as I do, and I've learned that he's very little surer about life than anyone else. We do have more than just the superficial feelings in common, though, and he does think I'm special. Maybe it's more in my mind than anywhere else, but it seems that he's watching out for me, and I wouldn't trade that secure feeling for anything at all.

I'm not the smartest girl in the world, or the luckiest, or the prettiest; I don't have the most clothes, or the most dates, or the most friends. But now I'm somebody's little sister, and somehow those things don't matter so much any more.
